Looking down the titles of the 18 films picked since the Royal screening was first held nobody can pretend that these represent the best. The list shows a slight preponderance of Hollywood subjects over Britain (and that's always a bone of contention) but, significantly, not one of the many excellent foreign-language imports has ever been picked.

First restriction is that the honored film should not have been seen in this country before the Big Event. Many wily producers have cottoned on to the fact that the "Royal Film" accolade, while satisfying ego, does not sell tickets to the average cinemagoer in the provinces. Most producers prefer to forego the honor of having their film chosen in favor of getting it out to the customers fast. This restricts, sadly, the number of worthwhile films available for viewing by the committee.

Fear to Offend

A more valid point is that the Committee is invariably in two minds as to what type of film is required to befit the Royal Occasion. Is a controversial theme too risky? Is a story too saucy and frivolous? Would the Royal Party prefer, metaphorically, to put its feet up and have fun? Selectors usually play safe. Royal guests are never in danger of being offended or embarrassed. However, they may suffer profound boredom. Above all, the Royal Party is rarely faced with the necessity for thought.

"Problem" pictures have included "The Last Angry Man," "Where No Vultures Fly" and "A Matter of Life and Death." "Worthy" ones such as "The Forsyte Saga," "Sammy Going South," "Scott of the Antartic," and "The Mudlark" have had their moments. But usually the choice is for escapist entertainment, varying from the excellent "To Catch A Thief," "The Horse's Mouth" and "West Side Story" to such run-of-the mill fare as (this year) "Move Over, Darling," or "Because You're Mine," "Rob Roy" and "Beau Brummell."

Stage Show Problem

The stage show, energetically and conscientiously staged, usually by Vivian Cox, also presents its problems if the stars just come on and bow and say "how proud I am to be here." Then the lineup benefits nobody but the swagger coutouriers who supply the femme stars' gowns. If they attempt to do any kind of potted revue or vaude show many of them merely show up the fact that without scriptwriters and directors they are dead ducks. In any case, Cox, who does an astute job in the circumstances, is faced with the problem of lack of rehearsal time.

Perhaps the biggest source of cynicism stems from the line-up of notabilities selected to be presented to the Royal Party in the theatre foyer. This usually consists firstly of an inevitable list of trade bigwigs and with some it has become an annual event. Then come the stars. But what stars? There is a bunch of British reliables who can usually be called upon and it must seem almost like Old Home Week when, for instance, the Queen, Prince Philip or Princess Margaret are introduced yet again to, say, Richard Attenborough, Jack Hawkins, Richard Todd, Peter Finch or Kenneth More.

The Royal Film Show presumably does not rate sufficient importance for Hollywood to juggle its expensive schedules to fly over American topliners specially for the event. So the Committee must rely mainly for its American stars on any who happen to be in Britain at the time for any other purpose. There are occasional appearances from the star of the film showing as, for instance, the special visit of James Garner this year. Any Continental actors or actresses who happen to be at a loose end and can be flown over quickly are eagerly added to the haphazard hand-shake party, particularly if they are goodlookers who will appeal to the news and tv lensers.

But it is argued that, always, there are some comparative nonentities presented when hardworking up and coming Britain actors get the brushoff.

Scot Cinemas Go For More Bars

Edinburgh.

New trend in Auld Lang Syne show-biz is to have bars in more and more cinemas. Jim Poole, indie exhib, is successfully operating a bar alongside his specialized Cameo cinema here. It is separate from the cinema, but easily accessible from inside the foyer. Patrons for the bar have first to produce a cinema admission ticket.

Another bar operating successfully is at the ABC Coliseum, Glasgow, where "How The West Was Won" is showing. It is the only cinema in Glasgow with a drink license although observers see a trend towards more bars. The Tivoli Cinema, Dundee, also has been granted a drinks license.

SWEDE FILMS' TOUGH SELL IN SVENSKATOWN

Minneapolis.

Minneapolis undoubtedly has the largest Scandinavian population of any American city. Swedes predominate. Nevertheless, Scandinavian-produced films, and particularly those from Sweden, including director Ingmar Bergman's, invariably have tough boxoffice going here.

Latest instance has been Bergman's "The Silence" (Janus) which was spotted into two local firstrun neighborhood houses day and date, given an especially big and expensive newspaper advertising campaign and was the recipient of reviewers' praise.

Picture departed after two weeks at each of the houses and its total take was considered "very disappointing."

Frisco Festival

our fault, but when Arthur Freed, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, speaking at our last opening night, said that Hollywood would cooperate with the Festival henceforth, I took him at his word and I know that Hollywood will—and this is one major breakthrough. We will continue to invite submissions from producers and governments throughout the world; many will cooperate; a few will not (their loss!) but more will enter films this year than entered in 1963, 1962, etc., on back to 1957 when we started with 15 entries.

Our Competitor; Money

We have had three publicists in three years and now we have a fourth! The reason: the experience they have gained with us has somehow or other made it possible for them to seek and find greener pastures—and when I say green I do mean money.

The Festival has operated with the official recognition of the Federation of International Film Producers' Associations, with the exception of 1963; our application for 1964 is in their hands now.

I say the Metro Theater is ideal for the Festival; it has 1,000 seats and is therefore not too large and not too small for such a function. Parking may be difficult in the area but where is it not, near any theatre on Market Street?

The word levee, according to my dictionary, has at least two or three definitions: a public court assembly, held in the early afternoon, at which men only are received (Great Britain) and—the Good Lord defend us!—"a reception of visitors held on arising from bed, as formerly by a royal personage." If your writer was implying that I am (or even think I am) a monarch, he should consult not only with my long-suffering wife, but with the staff of the Festival itself, not to mention the local newspapers. They will rapidly disabuse him.

Is It a One-Man Show?

But if, as I suspect, he means that the Festival has been a one-man show, I must beg his indulgence and present some further facts:

Fact 1. Without the assistance of the "socialites" whom your other man, Jim Estes (writing on the same page, same issue) found "a bore," the work of the Festival would have been compounded beyond endurance for any of us. They not only helped to "put over previous Fests with the moneybag social crowd" but they are, almost without exception, literate and cultured people who put in a great many hours of their own time and energy, helping us with the complicated logistics involved. The same is true of the Film Festival Volunteers—"career girls, white collar men" who, Estes frankly admits, "did mountains of dirty work, as in past years." These people number into the scores.

Fact 2. It is true that, as I have every year, I am going abroad this year to beg, borrow and plead for product. Without this sort of personal contact—on a world-wide basis—there would be no festival and if the mountain will not come to Mohammed Levin (certainly not a monarch or even a prophet), then Mohammed must go to the mountain.

It is a fact of life that every passing year sees more film festivals operating all over the world. This year—1963-1964—they are being held in some 71 cities scattered from Burma to Ireland and it should scarcely surprise your sleuth that "At least 11 of the 20 competitive films . . . had been shown at previous film festivals, some at more than one." Our festival is held late in October or early in November. How could such duplication be avoided—and is it important? The important thing is that none of the films we have shown had been shown previously in the U.S.A. We are therefore presenting, for an ever-increasing audience in the United States, new and fresh product which they coud not see or even know about unless they went to Deauville, Bergamo, Tokyo, Moscow or Sydney—earlier in the year.

Criticism is welcomed by the San Francisco International Film Festival; we not only want it; we insist on it. But you have to be inside one of these things to realize what is really going on and what the scores of people involved have to wrestle with, day in, day out, not only during the Festival itself, but for months before and after the audience and distinguished guests have gone back to Prague, Warsaw, Bombay, Belgrade or Tokyo.

From a festival presenting 15 feature films in 1957, we have grown to one which presented 21 features last year and more than 340 others, in a dozen categories. Sometimes we put our foot in our mouth; sometimes we merely trip over it—in public.

Take-Out of $$ Eased Globally But American Film Companies Face New Tricky Foreign Rules

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington.

Another upbeat year in overseas film earnings was predicted by the U.S. Commerce Dept. Remittances for 1963 were expected to reach $220,000,000 compared to the $215,000,000 pulled in during 1962.

The problem of drawing back overseas coin—a major concern a few years ago—is diminishing. Restrictions still exist, however, in Spain, Pakistan, India, Burma, Indonesia and Egypt.

A problem of a different nature is developing though, the Commerce Dept. averred. That is the attempt of numerous countries to saddle Yank film companies with legislative restrictions on distribution and exploitation of pictures.

One trend is to laws requiring U.S. companies to distribute films through national distributors or government-established operations. This barrier has cropped up in Burma, Pakistan, Indonesia, Korea, Morocco and Tunisia.

Among the upbeat factors reported by the Commerce Dept. is foreign acceptance and approval for "epic" pictures which are pulling in hefty grosses overseas.

Commerce Dept. gave this rundown of U.S. film trade abroad:

Europe

Austria—Exhibitors, facing declining attendance, want relief from high house taxes rather than having to resort to upped admissions prices. Their prospects are not viewed as bright.

Belgium—A 1963 law gives the Minister of Economic Affairs power to set maximum percentages of gross receipts which could be paid as rentals. Legislation has not been implemented with specific regulations, however.

Still in effect is the 65% remittance agreement worked out with Belgian government in 1961. The 35% remaining in Belgium can be used for operating expenses.

France — The agreement between the French Government and the Motion Picture Export Assn. of America runs out at the end of this year. It allows 290 import permits for Yank feature films, of which 150 can be issued in 1964. Regulations on playing time require French films to be exhibited five weeks out of every 13.

Greece—A 60% limit is placed on remittances for foreign producers. All royalties are placed in the Bank of Greece to be withdrawn only after the distributor's records are audited. Foreign earnings above the 60% limit can be used for covering expenses, or other ventures okayed by the Bank. A Greek domestic production law aims at encouraging coproductions with foreign filmmakers.

Italy—Film import quotas were eliminated in the March, 1963 pact signed by MPEA and ANICA, the Italian producer-distributor association. Also junked in the agreement were the $8,000 dubbing fee and restrictions on remittances. Exhibitors are still required to show domestic feature films at least 100 days a year and Italian shorts 180 days. Rebates of 20% and 2% of the admissions price are given exhibs for showing Italian features and shorts respectively.

Poland — Yank feature films have been purchased with Informational Media Guaranty funds, but pressures are on Congress here to drop the program. Nearly $200,000 of this coin has been available annually for buying U.S. films.

Rumania—Extension of the cultural exchange agreement includes provisions for Yank films to be sold to Rumania. Exchange of coin is controlled by the National Bank of Rumania.

Spain — Negotiations are continuing to replace the import agreement between MPEA and the government which expired in 1962. A quota of 103 U.S. imports has been set by the government and will remain in effect until Oct. 30. U.S. earnings are put 30-70 in free and blocked accounts. The latter must be used in Spain. Dubbing fees for Yank pictures run from $10,833 to $16,660 depending on the expected commercial pull of the films. Exhibitors in Madrid and Barcelona are required to play at least four different domestic pictures every 56 days. Other houses must screen nine different Spanish films every 63 days.

Latin America

Brazil — The chaotic political situation of recent weeks may render film actions by the Goulart government academic. Last August a 40% tax was slapped on film import profits with remittances being okayed only after proof of tax payment was shown. Coin was to go to domestic production.

Also enacted was a requirement that an amount equal to 200% of any remittance be deposited in the Bank of Brazil for 180 days sans interest. Formerly an amount equal to the remittance had to be deposited.

A requirement that all houses screen Brazilian films 56 days annually was also imposed last year. A quarterly quota of 14 showings included two Saturdays and two Sundays per quarter.

Mexico—Last August the government ruled import permits would be required for all copies of foreign films brought into the country.

Africa

Algeria—The revolutionary government last October revised its exchange control laws cutting back on transactions with France. U.S. pictures are generally distributed through French subsidaries which previously had privileged status.

Morocco—Beginning last January, the Government asked Yank producers to have their pictures distributed by companies with Moroccan shareholders or else lose their privilege to transfer film earnings.

Nigeria — A censorship board was established last year to okay any films exhibited there.

United Arab Republic—Agreement was finally reached last year to unfreeze earnings which had been blocked since late 1961. The deal provides for $50,000 of Yank coin to be remitetd monthly.

Asia

Burma—Yank imports all but ended late last year when a Foreign Films Import Control Board was set up. This was capstone of a long standing imbroglio with Yank producers and the Burmese government which is trying to nationalize all imports.

Formosa — Yanks have been given a 260 film quota for year ending June 30.

India—Jacked up import and excise taxes were imposed on pictures last March over Yank protests and were reduced slightly in December. An agreement between the Indian Government and MPEAA sets the import quota at 55% of the best years imports during the base period April 1951-March 1953.

Japan—Import quota was set last April at 275 with 144 going to U.S. Previously Yanks could bring in 113 of 231.

Korea—A new film law went into effect last year aimed at limiting imports to licensed Korean producers. Only five producers have been licensed and the affect of this law remains problematic.

Pakistan — A Government-MPEAA agreement limiting transfer of film earnings at $168,000 was renewed last September. Excess earnings are blocked.

Facts & Figures About Britain's Film Industry, BOT Statistics

By J. P. H. WALTON

(General Secretary, British Film Producers Assn.)

London.

In 1963, 72 British films over 72 minutes in length were registered with our Board of Trade (registration being a pre-requisite before any film can be publicly shown in this country). In the same year (but not of course confined to the same film) the major circuits showed 49 British films as first features and 13 British films as co-features (A.B.C. 22 (7 co-features), Rank 20 (6 co-features)); National and Independent 7.

It is too early to say how many British features will be registered in 1964. A run-down which the B.F.P.A. has recently (March) been making seems to show that numbers will be pretty much as in 1963. Already (March) 21 British first features (3 of these being co-feature releases) have been scheduled by the two major circuits for early 1964 release.

The Board of Trade does not keep a record of the cost of production of British films and even if it did, this information would probably not be publicly available, so we have to rely on estimates and intelligent guessing. Of 36 films assisted by our official revolving fund (National Film Finance Corporation) in the two years ended March 31, 1963, 12 had budgets between $210,000-$350,000, 14 had budgets between $210,000 and $290,000, and 10 had budgets in excess of $290,000. The average budget for these last ten was just over $644,000. The spread of cost of N.F.F.C.-assisted films cannot perhaps be taken as entirely typical, as N.F.F.C. assistance, although covering 366 of the 730 British quota first feature film exhibited during the 12 years 1950 to 1961, is not requested for some of our largest productions. Of B.F.P.A. members' films in a recent period, 57% cost over $420,000.

The only firm information we have as to where the money goes is in various N.F.F.C. reports, and even they have not given it for recent years. Taking N.F.F.C. assisted films that were begun in the year 1957/8, the major items were: acting (18.2%); production unit salaries (14.4%); studio facilities (11.2%); craft labor (9.5%). For these films, cost of financing, legal charges, the completion guarantees and insurance accounted for 9.3% of the cost. Of more recent years, participations and deferments have, of course, made the picture less clear.

Who are the producers of the films? It was stated in December, 1963 in the House of Commons that currently about one-third of British product depends on U.S. support, another third depends on the British majors, and the remaining third is "independent" production in the currently-used loose sense of that term.

U.K. box office take in 1963 has been provisionally given as $160,000, out of which first comes the levy contribution (British Film Fund) of $10,360,000. Overall, the levy accounts for rather more than 6% of the U.K. box office, and the British producer's share is of the order of 7%. The levy, as most readers will know, is distributed strictly in proportion to the distributors' gross of each film.

BOT Statistics

The collection and publication of figures relating to overseas trade in British films have only recently been undertaken by the Board of Trade. The figures as published are hard to follow, but we can at any rate discern that about one-third of total overseas earnings of British films come from Western Germany, Italy, France and Spain, an impressive total and a tribute to film salesmen working for the exporting companies. The other major markets abroad are of course Commonwealth countries and other English-speaking areas. The amount received per film from overseas varies widely and it is incautious even to guess at an average figure. A very small sample of British films recently examined (the sample did not contain any blockbusters) yielded an average of $112,000 per film.

Facts and figures cannot yet be given about co-produced films because at present (March) the U.K. still has to sign its first co-production treaty. The 1960 Films Act paved the way for such treaties but negotiations for them have been prolonged by the ultra-cautious approach to the subject on the part of the British film trades unions.

The average number employed in feature film studios has remained at around 4,000 for many years. Nearly three-quarters of these are craftsmen and other grades as cared for by the National Association of Technical and Kine Employees (N.A.T.K.E.) and just over 10% are electricians covered by the Electrical Trades Union. The remainder (about 18%) are technicians in the Association of Cinematograph and Television Technicians (A.C.T.T.). A figure reported with pleasure is that over 80% of the people currently engaged in studio work have been so employed for more than a year.

As with co-productions, figures are not yet available in illustration of the pay-television experiment in the U.K. which will start in the autumn of 1964 in eight or nine areas where wired networks already exist. Pay television raises important questions for film producers; as to whether the pay television operators, who will be monopolists in their respective areas will make reasonable offers for films; to what extent the free television services will compete; and above all, to what extent will the public pay. To none of these questions is there an answer at the present time.

What do all these figures portend for the future? Attendance at U.K. cinemas in recent months have been more encouraging than for a long time past; seven out of the top ten films shown in the U.K. in the twelve months to last October were British, and—latest news—"Tom Jones" has won three of the major awards given annually by the British Society of Film and Television Arts. British feature film producers are confident that they can meet the challenge of the changing times, but they now realize more than ever before that there is no room for mediocrity. Most film producers regard this as a thoroughly healthy state of affairs.

British Snooting Melbourne Fest

Melbourne.

Line-up for the 13th Melbourne Film festival,—May 29 to June 15, looks to be the most impressive yet. In all 25 different countries will unreel 30 feature films. Strangely enough, the organizers haven't been able to obtain anything from Britain. It had been hoped to show "The Servant," but Australian exhibitors seemingly didn't want it shown. The British apparently aren't interested in Australian fests.

This one will show, for the first time, a Turkish film (the comedy "Nothing But Broken Dishes"). Also an Egyptian one.

From the U.S.A. will come Harold Lloyd's second compilation, "The Funny Side of Life" and also among the documentaries, the Gary Cooper-excerpted "The Tall American."

Here will be Fellini's "8½," Bergman's "So Close to Life," Franju's "Therese Desqueyroux," Wajda's "Siberian Lady Macbeth," Rosi's "Hands Across the City," Ozu's "An Autumn Afternoon," Bresson's "The Trial of Joan of Arc" and Bunuel's "The Exterminating Angel." These are all first showings Down Under.

Classical pictures of interest will be Von Stroheim's 1921 "Foolish Wives," Dietrich in "The Blue Angel" and Emil Jannings in "Variety."

Through C.I.N.E., the organizers have obtained what they describe as six very excellent American shorts, amongst them "Dead Birds" and "The Exiles." There are also four shorts from India including the cartoon "The Wives and Wives." Britain is represented in the documentary section with quite a few shorts which are said to be first class.

Gt. Britain TV Outfit Invests in Brit. Lion

London.

One of Britain's commercial tele outfits is revealed as a substantial investor in the New British Lion group headed by Sir Michael Balcon.

At the annual general meeting of TWW in Cardiff last Thursday (23), Lord Derby, the company chairman, disclosed that it had a $140,000 investment in BL. This was held through a film production company run by Frank Launder and Sidney Gilliat.

British Unions Kill Ireland's One Film Plant

By E. F. MacSWEENEY

Dublin.

Film production in Ireland slowed to a standstill in 1963 following continuing disputes over manning at country's only studio, Ardmore, which has two 100 ft. x 80 ft. x 33 ft. studios and one 80 x 30 x 26 ft. The last film to come off its floor was "Of Human Bondage" starring Kim Novak (Seven Arts for Metro.)

Disputes started when Britain's Electrical Trade Union claimed right to crew productions to be made at Ardmore. This was disputed by Irish Electrical Trade Union and despite efforts of the General Trade Union group at Ardmore, no compromise could be reached. On "Of Human Bondage" Irish E.T.U. men were not used, Irish electricians being provided from the General Union group at the Studio to supplement the London Unionists. The problem has arisen because pictures made by Companies at Ardmore qualify for Eady grants as British films. British craft crew argue that if British money is being paid to the producers, then citizens of Britain should be employed.

Such quarrels naturally made producers reluctant to use studios here and in November the Government-sponsored Industrial Credit Co. appointed a Receiver for Ardmore Studios (Ireland) Limited. The Minister for Finance disclosed some months earlier that Industrial Credit had advanced $599,700 in the form of a debenture loan and the Industrial Development Authority had made a grant of $126,000 to the Studios.

Irish Film Finance Corp. Ltd. which was set up to provide assistance to producers, reported during the year that it had made advances totalling $1,063,157 and of this sum $395,688 had been written off and $649,079 was due to the Corporation for Principal and Interest in respect of eight productions at the end of October 1963. A spokesman for the Corporation pointed out that the recovery of the amount depended on the success of the films, five of which were on release, one was yet to be released. One had finished its release in Britain but it was hoped might be sold in the United States. Provision had been made for the estimated loss in the case of the remaining film consequent on the appointment of a Receiver over the production and company.

The difficulties for independent producers in obtaining a release for films in Britain was regarded as a further adverse factor for Ardmore and the Irish Film Finance Corp. spokesman said that the Corporation must limit consideration of applications to those cases where there was a strong probability of a circuit release.

Occasional use has been made of the dubbing facilities available at Ardmore and some tentative approaches regarding film-making have been made, but at the time of this report nothing definite has been announced although the equipment, including cameras and all recording facilities are still on the premises.

Carrying On 'Carry On'

Conversation overheard between PETER ROGERS and GERALD THOMAS, producer and director of the "CARRY ON" series, at Pinewood Studios, England. Rushed by tape to VARIETY*'s International Film Edition.*

P.R. Gerald, how do you feel about making another 'Carry On'?

G.T. (alarmed) Another one? (Resigned) But why not? Have we ever stopped?

P.R. This one will only make No. 10.

G.T. Ten. Well, that's a round figure.

P.R. So is Cleopatra.

G.T. How did she get into the act?

P.R. That's the next one. "Carry On Cleopatra."

G.T. How did you persuade Shakespeare to write a "Carry On"?

P.R. I didn't. He just anticipated it. After all, this is Shakespeare's Quatercentenary. I think we ought to get on the bandwagon. Who are these National Theatre people, anyway?

G.T. But, Peter, I seem to remember a Cleopatra film being made before.

P.R. Oh, small stuff. Ours won't be like that at all.

G.T. You can say that again. It might be a good idea, at that. What'll we do about the Needle?

P.R. Oh, the critics will have that as usual. Pity we can't get Liz Taylor.

G.T. Never mind, Hattie Jacques is bigger. (Eyes Kindling). Yes, I'm beginning to see it all. Wonderful locations on the River Nile . . .

P.R. What's wrong with the Thames? Why, we didn't even go to London for "Carry On, Cabbie." Still, we used real wood for Kenneth Williams' false leg in "Carry On Jack."

G.T. (bitterly) Big deal.

P.R. Ah, but that's the whole point of the "Carry Ons." Economical budgeting. Golden gags — cheaper by the dozen!

G.T. So no foreign location, no Harrison, no Taylor

P.R. (cheerfully) All gone for a Burton!

G.T. Still there's the Old Gang to call on. Reliable, untemperamental, quick to see a novel twist in an old gag . . .

P.R. But not too novel . . .

G.T. A grand team like Hattie and Ken Connor . . .

P.R. Charley Hawtrey, Sid James, Bernard Cribbins, Liz Fraser, Ken Williams, Irene Handl. Yes, we love 'em.

G.T. And so do the public. Remember our first "Carry On"?

P.R. "Carry on Sergeant." Kapers in khaki. Army!

G.T. Ah, me! The critics weren't too sure whether they ought to like that one, did they?

P.R. I don't think they're too sure now. Very non-committal stuff like: "If this is the sort of thing you like then you will like this" and "Mixture as before."

G.T. And I seem to recall that the great American public was a bit cautious, at first, about "Carry On Sergeant."

P.R. Maybe they were at first—but we've certainly broken through. The ticket-buyers were probably looking for a message. And the only one we had to give them was "Relax for a couple of hours and have fun."

G.T. And not a bad message at that. But will "Cleo" be the last "Carry On"?

P.R. I doubt it. Certainly not while the public want to see them—and they still do.

G.T. So what about my burning ambition? To make "Phaedre On Ice" and "Son of Oedipus Rex."

P.R. Is "Phaedre On Ice" a comedy?

G.T. No. Ice.

P.R. No dice. Let's face it, Gerry. Even if you made "The Son of Oedipus Rex" in UutraCinemascopery with foreign subtitles and Harrison playing Rex you'd still be known as the director of the "Carry Ons."

G.T. Such is fame. So we might as well carry on carrying on?

P.R. Yes. There are endless subjects. "Carry On Camping," "Carry On Yanks," "Carry On" . . . well, we might even continue where Hollywood left off. "Karry On Kildare." Even a musical, maybe . . .

G.T. "Carry On, Chorus"?

P.R. After all, think of the free publicity. Headlines in the papers when the nurses won their pay claim strike. "CARRY ON NURSE." Remember when Olivier and that lot made "The Devil's Disciple" and one of the officers had to say "Carry on Sergeant"? Think of the roar that got from the white tie audience.

G.T. Yes, and when Sir Malcolm Sargent was conducting the Proms the youngsters held placards saying: "Carry On, Sargent" That's fame.

P.R. After all, don't forget that we're in the business of make-believe . . .

G.T. Yes, like making believe that one day we'll make a classic instead of a Carry On. So what about my burning ambition?

P.R. It's not a bad idea. I can see the title now. "Carry On Burning!" or even "Carry On Yearning!"

G.T. Well, Peter. I've got infinite confidence in the public and in you.

P.R. (goes to phone) Good! And I've got infinite confidence in one man. (he phones, then puts down receiver). That was our bank manager.

G.T. And what did he say?

P.R. Gerry, my boy. He said: "CARRY ON, EARNING!"

(Blackout)

SCOTLAND'S FANCY FOR YANK COMEDY

Glasgow.

American films, particularly those starring such favorites as Cary Grant, Doris Day, Audrey Hepburn, Bob Hope, etc., remain tops in Scotland. English product does not always register as strongly as it does south of the Bobby Burns border.

U.S. product in light comedy vein is always a winner. However, Scots fancy James Bond thriller extravaganzas, which can be reckoned on for top business, too.

As a nation, Scots are independent-minded and nationalistic, and England is as "foreign" to Scots as the U.S.A. There is also a liking for the American way of life in contrast to the dour, chilly Scot life.

New theatres are not being built here. Also smaller ones tend to shutter in rural areas, where the spread of television hurts. Travel facilities, poor, also hurt.

Re-Recording and Dubbing Theatre

Jamaica Ginger (Rogers) But Yes-There-Are-No Studios In Kingston

By DUDLEY G. MacMILLAN

Kingston, Jamaica.

Although efforts have been made from time to time to start a film industry in this island, studios capable of handling feature productions have not yet been established. Films have been shot on the island, of course, by location companies. "Passionate Summer" (British) was shot here a few years ago, and more recently "Dr. No." Others of more ancient vintage have also been made on the island.

Last year, the Hollywood husband-and-wife team of Willam Marshall and Ginger Rogers entered into a contract with the Jamaican government to set up a feature-sized studio and laboratory facilities. Nothing has come of it up to now, however.

Also during last year a 40'x30' soundstage, with full recording and studio facilities, was put up by a Jamaican-owned film company named Vista Productions which produces filmed commercials. Outside the commercial field, there is a Government Film Unit which makes official documentaries and shorts. One of its documentaries, "Water Is Life," won first prize in a British film competition—the Royal Society of Arts Commonwealth Film Award in 1962.

(Latest information from Jamaica is that the proposed films starring Miss Rogers are on the verge of actuality.—Ed.)

SUBSIDY PLANS DON'T SOLVE ILLS

By HAROLD MYERS

At one point at the beginning of this year there was only one film in production in British studios, and that was being financed by a major American company. Such a situation is difficult to understand and ironical to contemplate in view of the fact that the British film aid scheme, commonly known as the Eady Fund, is the envy of most other European film producing nations.

A variety of causes led to this critical situation, but before analysing them in detail it is as well to take a new look at the British film aid plan. The Eady Fund, which gets its income from a slice of boxoffice takings, averages somewhere around $11,000,000 a year, which is divvied out to producers of British Quota pictures. Anyone who makes a film in the United Kingdom can qualify for this aid, provided that the Quota laws are observed and that the film is made by a British company.

On the present scale, the distribution works out at around 35% to 40% of the distributors' share and that yield is passed on to the producer. That puts the Eady scheme slightly ahead of the 14% film aid laws in France and Italy (which are calculated on b.o. gross), though it is not a static figure and fluctuates according to boxoffice income.

Not many continental producers have taken to filming in Britain, but the Yank majors have found the additional income accruing to a British Quota picture extremely handy. The yield, of course, must vary, but the Eady plan was designed on the premise that it would put a premium on commercial success, and when a film clicks in a big way it gets a big reward. One classic example, for instance is the $1,000,000 plus that went from the Eady kitty to "The Guns of Navarone," and, this is the Ripley—Carl Foreman felt it was all wrong that a successful picture should receive so much by way of subsidy, and campaigned for a change to help the less successful producer. Foreman, however, appears to be unique in this direction and his last production, "The Victors," though made at Shepperton with a predominantly British crew, failed to qualify for British Quota because of the predominance of American artists.

In spite of such examples of inequality, whereby the scheme helps to make the rich richer, the Eady plan remains the envy of many Continental nations. The German production industry, for example, has been battling for years for a film aid law to lift it out of the doldrums, but so far has failed to lick the opposition from exhibiting interests. The Swedes, who suf-

A British Film Showman Ponders: Just What Elements Make a Hit?

By FREDERICK L. THOMAS

London.

Being invited, as a distributor, to give an opinion on what constitutes an acceptable British film is rather like asking a lamb to adopt the carnivorous appetite of a lion!

Whether luck or judgment is the eventual arbiter of success is debatable, but prime essentials today are breadth of vision and an appreciation of the power of imaginative skill over a public largely uninterested in the obscure fantasies of dedicated intellectuals. Enough of the pandering to a supposedly sick world by emphasising the decadence of the few for the approval of a captious minority, underscoring mundane miseries instead of inspiring and exciting the vast mass of entertainment seekers clamouring for escapism.

You may well question the value of mere words in the search for a solution, but one must be found if the British film is to survive financially as well as a world force. The pattern is clearly defined for all but the wilfully blind; restrictions in any shape or form must be eschewed in favour of progressive thinking and planning.

A big subject does not necessarily mean spectacle any more than escapism means only a frivolous musical. Laughter, yes, but regrettably humour is very often to national to be internationally successful. True, there is always slapstick which almost every type of audience understands and enjoys, but it could not hope to be as outstanding as basically serious subjects on the gigantic scale demanded today.

British films still have significance in world markets but as exceptions rather than rule. Can they retain and extend it in the face of today's immensely competitive factors?

Certainly not by concentrating on purely national subjects conceived from the narrow viewpoint of near parochialism and expressed as cheaply as possible. Today the only film really worthwhile from any and every angle is the one written, produced, directed and starred from the international outlook.

It does not mean a world-wide jumble of hopeful etceteras — it does mean a recognizably British film planned and executed on the epic lines that spell entertainment throughout the world. Potboilers on stage lines have no place in today's scheme — television produces a surfeit of these.

Today's up-to-the-minute presentation methods with vast screens, fascinating colour and stereophonic sound must have entertainment of the standard that still further enhances he agglomerate appeal. And equally vast sums must be available if the cinema is to take full advantage of the steadily increasing upsurge and interest on the part of a public bored with a "postage stamp" vista and a plethora of dialogue.

Alas, there is no magic formula that supplies all the answers to the vagaries of public taste—still the will-of-the wisp the industry has been seeking for more than fifty years. Is topicality the key? But what guarantee has the producer that the subject that appears uppermost in public thought today will still interest the cinemagoer by the time it is finished and presented—perhaps more than a year later?

And if he is lucky in hitting the jackpot with a new star, how can he hope to retain him or her against the lure of foreign studios and the seductive offers of the international entrepeneurs and still end up in the black? Truly the dice seem loaded, but that is no new state of affairs in the industry.

The really big British film has already arrested the attention of world markets, and there is no insuperable reason why it should not continue to do so. It is useless trying to cash in on the heels of other people's successes—there is only one answer today: the production that is big in every sense of the term, that retains the subtle character of is origin but translates it into entertainment terms of international appeal.

Britain is an Eldorado of talent that is the envy of the world—we must conserve it for the use of our film industry.

Irish Censorship - Ditto-Tough

Dublin.

Censorship is generally regarded as being sharp in Ireland. Film Censor last year rejected 31 of the 1,121 films submitted to him. Of the films passed, however, 156 of them were scissored before exhibition. Appeals against the Censor's decision were made in 13 cases but 11 of them were dismissed.

Although the film trade is inclined to blame censorship for its troubles, there is no doubt that one of the difficulties is the fact that Irish censorship has only one classification at the present time and except on special occasions films are passed for general exhibition. There are certain exceptions as, for example, "The Cardinal" (Columbia) which is being tagged for exhibition to persons over 18 only.

Both the trade and the National Film Institute of Ireland have pressed on a number of occasions for the introduction of Grade A Certificates limiting attendance to adults or general exhibition, but this has invariably been rejected by the Dept. of Justice.

Apart from the official censorship, the National Film Institute runs a reviewing panel of its own which is regarded as being influential in Provincial towns. This breaks films down into "General Audiences," "Adults and Adolescents," "Adult Audiences," and "Objectionable." During last year, of the 177 new releases or reissues not previously reviewed by the Institute panel, a total of 74 were approved for general audiences; 31 for adults and adolescents; 70 for adult audiences; two others were rated objectionable. Efforts to discourage the publication of these ratings have been made in some districts and at least one cinema group withdrew its advertising in local newspapers which featured the ratings.

Unwillingness on the part of some producers to recognize the highly Roman Catholic character of Ireland sometimes leads

Britain Probably Made Best War Pix During Hostilities, and Not Since

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

Not a soul living in Britain was untouched, even if indirectly, by the holocaust of World War II. Even youngsters born after the war have felt its aftermath. Yet, curiously, the British filmmakers have not risen fully to the mightiness of such a theme. The British attitude has had singularly little fire in its belly when it comes to its war films. Mainly, it has played cosily safe, using the war as a stockpot from which, occasionlly, it will produce a serviceable and entertaining idea, but rarely striking a firm attitude in its approach to the cause, the significance or the bitter result of the malady.

Perhaps it has ducked safely behind the axiom that anything of urgent importance must not be tackled too soon. Perhaps that is the thinking which is now producing a whale of a lot of books on the 1914-1918 World War, the successful stage show, "Oh, What a Lovely War!" and why a projected film about The Battle of the Somme against the Kaiser is now being considered with some awe.

Metro, through its British company, had in mind a re-do of R.C. Sherriff's "Journey's End," but is having second thoughts on its philosophy and attitude.

Hateful

British film attitude has broadly been: "It's a damned bad show but somebody's got to get on with it, so let's get cracking." Whilst acknowledging the grim brutality and futility of war British film makers have too rarely come out against it with understanding or with a fierceness of passion and revulsion that sears.

Significantly, some of the better British war pictures were made during the war. Thus "49th Parallel," with Sir Laurence Olivier and directed by Michael Powell, Powell's "One Of Our Aircraft Is Missing," and David Lean's "In Which We Serve" and "This Happy Breed" were filmed in the earlier years of the conflict. "The Way Ahead" and "Way To The Stars" with Trevor Howard, and even "The Foreman Went To France," with Tommy Trinder, were others that suggested that film makers then had an urgency, something to say, something to feel about the war. Not a great deal that has happened since has supported that theory.

The How and Why

In the biog field there have been several very good pictures that have earned a deserved place in the celluloid war gallery but still somehow missed out in exploring the greater problems of "how and why it happened" and "must it all happen again?"

"Odette" gave Anna Neagle a rich chance, which she rewardingly took, in portraying the gallant war heroine. Richard Todd as Gibson V.C. in "The Dam Busters," Kenneth More as Douglas Bader in "Reach For The Skies," and Virginia McKenna in "Crave Her Name With Pride" all contributed notable portraits of outstanding figures in 1939-1945.

And there were events that have been given just due. Sir Michael Balcon's "Dunkirk," "The Malta Story," a tribute to the battered, honored island, Kenneth More in "Sink The Bismarck," Peter Finch in "The Battle of the River Plate" and Richard Todd in "The Yangtse Incident" were all stirring films that could give Britain pride in our many great war achievements. But they primarily came out as gripping adventure stories with a seeming eye on the boxoffice but only incidently as part of the great tapestry of the war.

Examples

"The Colditz Story," "The Wooden Horse" "Albert R.N.," all comedy-adventure escape yarns with little worthwhile or new to say, Peter Ustinov's "Hotel Sahara," which possibly set out to be a piercing satire on the stupidity of war but which finally emerged simply as an often funny farce, "Cockleshell Heroes," a straightforward tribute to a service, and "Morning Departure," were worthy jobs. But without detracting from the many merits of such films it is pertinent to ask where was the firm point of view in them? Lewis Gilbert and Anthony Asquith are two directors who, from their work, clearly feel keenly and perceptively about war and its significance. Gilbert made "The Sea Shall Not Have Them," "Reach For The Sky," "Carve Her Name With Pride" and "Sink The Bismarck," apart from the trivial "Albert R.N." and "Light Up the Sky," which could have been a stirring tribute to the Royal Artillery's unsung searchlight men, but turned out to be a tepid comedy farce with Tommy Steele, which many searchlight men regarded as an insult. Clearly, Gilbert feels and thinks keenly on this topic, but usually lapses into a sort of neutrality.

Asquith, too, has contributed much to Britain's filmography of the War with "Freedom Radio," "We Dive at Dawn," "Orders To Kill" "The Demi-Paradise" and "The Way To The Stars." With his sensitive mind and intense emotions it is perhaps surprising that, though he has given food for thought in most of his films he has never produced the really great film about World War II or its effects that seemingly has yet to be made. "The Long And The Short And The Tall," directed by Leslie Norman, dealt with the atrocities of British patrols against the Japs, as did "Yesterday's Enemy" by Val Guest. Both treated the subject boldly, though both drew different conclusions. But at least these two films caused controversy and made people sit up and think, as did "A Hill in Korea," with Stanley Baker.

'Pacifistic' (?) War Pix

Much later came "Bridge On The River Kwai," a masterly piece of film-making and just recently "The Victors." The first raises the problem of how closely it was intended to being a war film about pacifism. It possibly misfired in that aim on the one possible accusation that the ideal held by the colonel, played by Alec Guinness, was probably untenable. Many viewers felt that his attitude was too personal a one, which, in the circumstances, spoke more for his own point of view than the nation's.

Carl Foreman tried, and often succeeded, in making his pacifist point in "The Victors," though the film was viewed by some critics as being cluttered by extraneous romantic interludes.

But Foreman's main theme was that war demeans everybody concerned with it, losers and victors. A valid viewpoint, and one which even Foreman would not claim to be original. Nevertheless when he attempted to stress his important text his critics reminded him sharply that "everybody, surely, is aware of that fact?" Yet can it be certain that the message has, indeed, penetrated the minds of even every person however thoughtful? Is it not therefore an argument worth reiterating, and constantly, even to the point of monotony? Perhaps, later, Foreman must have wondered whether it really is worth putting out one's neck and making a stand at all.

Many More Theses

Necessarily, this is only a skimpy reminder of British film makers' attempts to paint pictures of World War II as they saw it. But surely there should sometimes be a more uncompromising national attitude in British films about war? Has the subject of conscientious objectors really been probed effectively? Has it been sufficiently brought out that, dire though the sacrifice of death is in war there is perhaps a bigger sacrifice for those engaged in it to come back and find the black marketers and get-rich-quick merchants sitting sleekly and smugly in high places? Has the question of atomic warfare and balance of power been boldly, intelligently tackled? Have British directors sought to find out the degree of responsibility for war that may spring from appeasement? Is it the statesman, the service brasshats, the theologist, the big business tycoon, the scientists, the teachers . . or simply the plain citizen who is primarily responsible. Or is it everybody? What is being thought, taught and done to prevent a similar international calamity? Is there a way out in our time or even in the foreseeable future? Surely a theme as giant as war deserves giant thinking in such an influential medium as the cinema?

Of course, no film producer, director and writer can be expected to answer these questions with sufficient clarity, authority and humility to make a film that is a permanent solution to the criminal folly of war.

But if, as is inevitable, there are to be more British films about World War II let them be positive in their approach and in their message. Let them make the people think. If succeeding films are merely episodes, however thrilling, from war actions then British war films may become as endless and as confusing as those between American Yanks and Confederates in the Civil War. And by now there are plenty of bemused British film goers who are not quite sure about which is which and, anyway, which side they are on.

Unless John Wayne happens to be on hand, of course.

Plan 50 Mobile Cinerama Tents

London.

Itinerama Ltd. plans to have 50 worldwide Cinerama Mobile Theatres on the road by 1965, giving Cinerama a potential weekly gross of around $840,000 as extra gravy to the receipts from its hardtop houses. The first mobile Cinerama Theatre in Britain had its preem at Richmond, near London, last Friday (24), teething troubles, including temporary collapse of the blue big top, delaying the opening by a week. This mobile theatre is the first of five planned for U.K. by next year, covering East Coast, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

The Richmond season is for about two weeks, with 15 weekly shows, at price ranges of 70c to $1.35. The cinema will then move on for similar seasons at Brighton, Southampton, Southsea, Poole and Paignton, wintering at either Bristol or Cardiff. The Mobile Theatre is a 1,216-seater, centrally heated and fully carpeted, and drawn to its locations by 42 red and yellow colored lorries, trailers and caravans. Cinerama Inc. and Mills' Circus, represented by the brothers Mills, have financial stakes in the venture.

fered under heavy taxation, now have an intriguing scheme operating through the Swedish Film Institute, and significantly there is a marked upsurge in the volume and quality of production. The Danes have had it rough, also, but are taking solace from the belief that a scheme on the Swedish principle will shortly be introduced. And Spain, too, has a new plan in the drafting stage.

So with all that extra loot returning to the producer what went wrong in Britain? It can really be considered on the basis of an elementary lesson in economics, dealing with the laws of supply and demand. When the Eady plan was put on a statutory level, there were three major circuits and a fourth ad hoc group of theatres playing the Fox releases. The producer of a British film, therefore, had the possibility of four outlets, all of which had to comply with the 30% Quota. 20th-Fox eventually made its peace with the Rank group and the outlet, which it had created by its own ingenuity, virtually disappeared overnight. Then, some years later, John Davis announced the rationalization plan for the Rank Organization, which involved merging all top Odeon and Gaumont theatres into the Rank chain, with the others providing the basis for what was to be known as a national release. Despite optimistic forecasts, however, the earning potentiality of the national release was disappointing to producers and they preferred to stand in line for a suitable date either on the Rank or Associated British circuits.

Suddenly, therefore, a situation developed whereby a comparatively high number of British films were queueing up for dates — sometimes waiting as much as nine, 12 or even 15 months. That waiting period crippled the chances of raising finance for new production and the resultant backlog of British pictures standing in line for playdates eventually led to an almost total cessation of production. The timing could not have been more unfortunate, as the situation was aggravated by the negotiations for the sale of British Lion to private enterprise, thus adding to the confusion that already existed in local production circles.

To coin a cliche, time proved itself a great healer; the British Lion situation was eventually resolved with the sale of the company to a syndicate headed by that distinguished filmmaker, Sir Michael Balcon; and gradually order was restored and production resumed on a modest basis, though once again the American majors are predominant in the local scene.

At the time when the production crisis first loomed as a serious factor, a Government inquiry started through the Cinematograph Films Council. The fruits of that investigation have now led to the publication of a White Paper in which the problems of duopoly are recognized and a recommendation has gone forth to the industry to make a renewed stab at creating an economically viable third outlet.

The prospects of establishing such a third circuit are, at best, highly questionable; but there seems to be little doubt that there will be renewed pressure in the coming months to raise the British film Quota from its present level of 30% to either 40% or 50% for the Quota year starting January, 1965. The telltale meetings which will determine the percentage issue will be held within the coming weeks, and while it is impossible to predict the outcome, it is known there is a growing body of opinion in favor of a higher Quota. Indeed, a last-minute attempt to amend the Quota upwards for 1964 failed by a very narrow margin.

Though there are signs of greater stability in British production today than was thought possible six months ago, this is, in some substantial measure, due to the continued and even growing confidence of American major companies. Columbia has maintained an active unit in Britain for many years and there is every indication that it will continue. United Artists, who moved into the British scene somewhat later, have had a number of standout hits to encourage them to expand, among them "Tom Jones," "Dr. No" and "From Russia With Love," with the currently filming "Beatlemania" looming as another stout winner. Paramount, with "Becket," Universal-International with "Chalk Garden," the Disney Organization with a string of British hits, Seven Arts, Metro, Warners and others have also reaped a rich harvest from British production and are maintaining their activity. All told, therefore, a bleak start for 1964 may well be transformed before the year is very much advanced.

The one disappointing feature has been the protracted negotiations for the launching of Anglo-European coproductions. If all goes well there should be a Government-to-Government treaty with France within a matter of months, but the unions—and they know they have the whip hand—have demanded safeguards to protect the native industries in London and Paris. If the treaty gets under way by next September, as seems possible, there will have to be provision for additional playing time over and above the existing 30% British film Quota. Otherwise, the unions won't play and that could be the end of that. For the time being, however, there is no prospect of the unions backing comparable treaties with Germany, Italy or Spain, because agreements for technicians in those countries are way below those operating in Britain. And the unions have made it clear that there must be no "sweated labor" on Anglo-European coproductions which qualify for British Quota and Statutory Eady levy.

But while theatres continue to close there is evidence of an important new market opening up in the coming months. Pay television is scheduled to start on a three-year trial period, this coming fall, and there is little doubt that motion pictures will play a vital part in program schedules. It has been agreed that the 30% theatrical Quota should apply to payvision services, and that must naturally lead to the opening up of an important new outlet. What it may mean to British production is, as of this writing, an open question, but there is general agreement that if the new service clicks with the paying public, the prospects for independent production will be greater than ever. But with the limited test areas made available by the Government it will be some time before the prospects can accurately be gauged.

For the time being, however, confidence is returning to British production. Studios are buzzing once more, and the volume of production is at least being maintained.

clashes over censorship and proposed cuts. Viewed objectively the censorship must be regarded as reasonable having regard to the religious views of the people.

The industry might be better served, however, if some pictures for which heavy cuts are demanded were withdrawn from the Irish market. The heavily cut versions do not give a true impression of the original picture. This frequently builds up bad public relations in an industry which needs all the friends it can gather and keep.

CUTS NEGATIVE COSTS BY OVER 50%

With this entirely new method of shooting 'Scope-type films the negative frame covers the height of only two perforations, thus only half the usual amount of negative is used in the camera. At the optical printing stage the two perforation frame is stretched vertically to twice the height, giving on the positive print a normal 'Scope-type four perforation frame.

Techniscope

OFFERS ALL THESE OTHER ADVANTAGES

- No distortion of the image.
- Greater depth of field due to the short focus lenses generally used, but no limitation on the use of any type of lens.
- Use of any type of "zoom" lens.
- Wider horizontal angle of view than normal 'Scope lenses. An 18mm lens can be used (which corresponds to a 35mm 'Scope) and even shorter focal lengths.
- Full utilization of all the light that hits the projector aperture.
- The possibility of shooting longer scenes with less risk of the film running out, and halving the possibility of picking up emulsion in the aperture with consequent unsteadiness.
- Half the changes of magazines, with consequent less loss of expensive time and infinitely less strain on the part of actors and, indeed, all concerned with shooting on the set.
- Half the cost of negative developing.
- A complete saving on the hiring of anamorphic camera lenses and total elimination of their weight and encumbrance. It's really true—anamorphic lenses are no longer used in the photography stage!
- More speed in the lenses and consequent possibility of shooting at lower light levels.
- The producer who intends to release his film in black and white can—by means of using Techniscope—make a colour negative at approximately the same cost and look forward to enjoying the additional residual values from colour television, Pay-TV, re-issues in colour, etc.

Narration spoken by Richard Burton

Dear Exhibitors of the World,

"ZULU" is the first film we have produced.

We wanted to make a fine, uncompromising, honest film that would bring in a lot of fine, uncompromising, honest money. Joe Levine and Paramount backed us to reach this double goal. After the opening here in Great Britain, we know that we have done it.

On the assumption that you would like to do the same, we would like you to exhibit "ZULU" wherever you are.

Yours faithfully,

Stanley Baker Cy Endfield

BRITAIN BUBBLES WITH TALENT

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

The only certain thing about film making these days is its dispersal. An "international world market" is the banner under which thesps, producers, directors and writers jet madly from Continent to Continent.

So it is pointless for Britain smugly to look at its home-born talent and jealously try to guard it for making British motion pictures. The better the talent then the more likely it is to be snapped up elsewhere—and pronto. Still, it is an encouraging thought that Britain is continuing to develop zestful young men and women in films.

The importance of directors with new ideas, imagination and sound technical knowhow is more and more recognized. One of the brightest to emerge recently has been Clive Donner, with two highly contrasting successes within a few months, the tricky Pinter film, "The Caretaker" and "Nothing But The Best," a highly praised "black" comedy helmed by Donner with superb panache. But Donner is no rocket that has suddenly flashed in the sky. He directed his first picture, "The Secret Place" at Pinewood nearly 10 years ago and, prior to that, had had a sound schooling in editing such topline product as "I Am A Camera," "Genevieve" "The Million Pound Note." He worked for a couple of years with David Lean ("one of the best of the middle-brows and more radical than sometimes shows in his films") and admits that he learned most of what he knows about comedy and timing from the late Henry ("Genevieve") Cornelius. Donner is now a very hot British property and Hollywood and the Continent are bound to woo him pretty soon.

Our Boy Tony

With "Look Back In Anger," "The Entertainer" and the rumbustious, rollicking "Tom Jones" behind him, Tony Richardson's future is set fair. Here is another man who keeps an eye on the boxoffice (his best venture is "The Charge of the Light Brigade"), doesn't disdain public acclaim but, nevertheless, would back away in horror from an obvious popular potboiler subject. John Guillermin, a tough, dedicated 39-year-old helmer, had his ground work firmly laid in French documentaries and smalltime features, branching into the bigger stuff in 1950. He can look back on such films as "Town On Trial," "The Whole Truth," and "I Was Monty's Double" and even survived having to direct "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure." Now Guillermin's star is ascending. Currently shooting "Batasi," the pic on which Britt Eklund powdered, Guillermin is an iron man on the set and also one who takes a vital interest in "composing" scenes on his pictures.

Joseph Losey has been directing pictures here for several years. But his prize winning success, "The Servant," has given him even greater stature. Tony Richardson has taken a chance by giving a comparative unknown, Desmond Davis, his most important assignment with "The Girl With Green Eyes," starring Rita Tushingham. It's a chance that a fairly inexperienced director might well have missed a few years back, and reveals a new heartening trend. Robert Hartford Davis, who has had to handle a couple of iffy pix lately, is readying to spread his wings with a big film on "The Battle of the Somme."

Sidney Thayers with his "This Is My Street," Sidney Furie continuing his swift, upward career with "The Leather Boys," Peter Yates being handed the tricky "One Way Pendulum," some classier horror jobs by Michael Carreras and Don Sharp, John ("Billy Liar") Schlesinger, Peter Graham Scott, Michael Winner, Christopher Miles and Robert Tronson are other evidences that newish blood is being stirred to join forces with such proved directors as Ronald Neame, Val Guest, Charles Crichton, Ken Annakin, Ken Hughes Roy Baker, Ralph Thomas and Guy Hamilton.

But directors cannot merely guide puppets. They have to have actors and Britain is coming across with some vivid new talent. Rarely, now, is the meretricious golden carrot of a contract dangled in front of new, young thesps. But there are opportunities in British films, despite the counter attractions of television and the theatre. Maybe there aren't enough chances, which is why these young people are regarding the world as their workshop. From the point of view of British films it is perhaps a pity that they must often escape so soon, though from the standpoint of their own careers and experience it is inevitable.

Sarah Miles, Susannah York, Hayley Mills and Janet Munro are an established quartet which, while not lost to Britain, have already been wooed and partially won by America. Samantha Eggar, who parted amicably from William Wyler's "The Collector," appears to be staying on in Hollywood, presumably thinking that the outlook there is sunny for her—and not only weatherwise. At 19, Francesca Annis has just finished working on "Flipper's New Adventure," which certainly provides her with a Hollywood showcase. And an even bigger one has been handed to the rather older Joanna Dunham. Miss Dunham's Continental and U.S. tour with "Romeo and Juliet" earned her the role of Mary Magdalene in George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told." If the tawny-tressed Miss Dunham's performance matches Stevens' prognostication then Britain can probably kiss her goodbye for awhile. But that's filmbiz. . . .

Just when Julie Christie and June Ritchie were crystalling their British film careers they upped sticks and fled to the theatre "for added experience." Wise gals. Miss Christie is touring the Continent and then the States with Shakespeare and Miss Ritchie is in stock in the provinces. But this is merely a worthwhile lull in their promising film careers. The girl who raised a buzz in "Billy Liar" is skedded to return to Britain to make "Darling" with Schlesinger and Miss Ritchie's offers are piling up. But all this still leaves Britain with a rewarding number of young femmes who are making the grade.

Susan Hampshire, Wendy Craig, another who scored heavily in "The Servant," Nyree Dawn Porter, Tracy Reed (the girl who played, briefly, and in briefs) George C. Scott's secretary in "Dr. Strangelove"; Ann Bell, Sally Smith, who is a blonde peppy little cutie, Millicent Martin, the tv girl and Julia Foster are all-up and coming young women worth keeping two eyes on. Nor has Rita Trishingham's full potential been realized. Honor Blackman, back in films after a long stint in television which has refurbished her name, could make the new James Bond adventure

Spread of Video Felt In Ireland

Some Houses Rent Out for Bingo, Though Distribs Oppose — Rue Yank Snub Of Cork Festival

By ED. F. MacSWEENEY

Dublin.

Extension of coverage by Telefis Eireann (Irish Video) to the whole country has increased the impact on nabe cinema houses. Although shut-downs over the past year have been few, there have been a number of leasings for Bingo nights, although these have been registered in many cases by distributors.

Dublin's first-run houses count lost the 3,400-seat Theatre Royal and the 800-seat Regal demolished to make room for a new office block for the Rank Organization development. Rest of situations doing well. Apart from new releases there has been some good exploitation of re-issues which have proved particularly remunerative.

The trade says that action-cum-sex is still the biggest come-on for the patrons. But as anyone who knows the censorship set-up in Ireland understands the sex is generally rather diluted. Preference for American productions still holds up and, generally speaking, the American picture takes more money on the first runs than an import from Britain. Interest in pictures from Continental Europe is limited and during last year only 27 came from Italy; 19 from France and six from Germany with a few from Spain and Greece. These mainly went to the small art houses in Dublin and rarely had much revenue earning capacity outside the major cities and towns.

Of the stars, Cary Grant still brings them in substantial numbers, with Rock Hudson and Burt Lancaster well up among Ireland's "Top Ten." Other males with strong interest to the Irish customer are Jerry Lewis, John Wayne, Paul Newman, Laurence Harvey and Cliff Richard. A general view is that the women are not so strong at the boxoffice, although Audrey Hepburn is rated to have the most apepal.

Failure of top U.S. and British support by way of stars for Cork International Film Festival is not helping general image of the industry. In recent years, Continentals, particularly France, Italy and Germany, have been making the running with personalities and more recently Eastern European countries have joined in. The Irish market may not be large when related to world markets, but it still is large enough to warrant attention and exploitation and co-operation from home offices. When exploitation is aided it usually pays off in the major cities, and the buildup of first run business in cities like Dublin and Cork can help to compensate for the sharp fall off in the neighborhood houses.

Film Fan Mags Languish in U.K.

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

As far as the British fan magazine field is concerned, the cinema has virtually had it. "Film Weekly," "Film Pictorial," "Picture Show" and "Picturegoer," which flourished to varying degree for some years have all given up the ghost and died, though some delayed the death pangs by an infusion of television and pop music features.

Now only "Photoplay," a monthly magazine, in which British original features are mingled with material from the American "Photoplay," remains to cater for those who like to read about current and future films as well as the love lives, problems, profiles and vital statistics of film thesps.

Even in "Photoplay" the inroad of pop music and tv is clear to see. It has a sound, workable circulation but not perhaps big enough to suggest that a magazine devoted purely to the middle class approach to the cinema can at present be a publisher's goldmine.

There are "The A.B.C. Review" and the newly launched "Show Time," two monthlies which, however disguised, are little more than "house organs." The first is published by Associated British Cinemas, sells at their cinemas and deals with releases and stars in which ABC is currently interested. "Show Time" is under the Rank banner and serves a similar function for the wares of Rank and associates. "Films and Filming" is a well-produced, intelligent monthly which deals with the cinema objectively but hardly caters for the average fan, who is more interested in bosoms and heart throbs than cinema trends, camera angles and directorial knowhow. "Sight and Sound," published by the British Film Institute serves a similar longhair purpose.

There is a handful of general pop magazines which offer a fairly generous quota of showbiz coverage. Papers like "Today," "Tit Bits," "Weekend," "Reveille" and such femme shets as "Woman," "Woman's Own" and "Woman's Mirror." These magazines frequently publish life stories, ghosted pieces and speciality screamers of the "What It's Like to Date Hearthrob Harry" or "This Was The Role That Made Me Grow Up" type.

In the popular newspapers the accent is invariably on Sensation. Thus, a recent series by Judy Garland in the bigselling Sunday tab, "The People," inevitably harped more on the miseries of Judy's life as a kid star and her subsequent unhappy marriages and ill health than on any assessment of Miss Garland as a cinemactress of some repute.

But even the magazines mentioned are now more interested in articles by or about television stars (particularly those who appear in regular series) and in young vocalists and groups than in film folk.

CHECK-LIST OF FRENCH FILMS

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Government aid rise to 14% on grosses from prior 5% stepped up production a bit in France. But fear of cuts in such aid to satisfy Common Mart plans for one coffer for all ECM signatories still braked production.

So 88 French and French majority interest pix plus several started in 1963 but only just winding. There were 53 French minority investments in coproductions with various countries. Again the over 300 licensed producers coproduced hugely among themselves and the usual biggies, with distrib and exhib arms, also partnered pix as well as making some on their own. Such a big producer as Henri Deutschmeister, Franco London Films, had no pix this year as he marked a new trend by specializing in pix for tv and formed a distrib setup with Cineriz of Italy.

Following is a check list of main producers, numerically, and others in the last full year of production:

GAUMONT

Possessing hardtops and a distribution arm as well as a subsidiary bankrolled by MGM for distrib rights, Gaumont International was in for four pix. "Carambolages" (Carom Shot) with local indie Trianon, the solid gangster comedy hit "Less Tontons Flingueurs" (The Gentle Gunmen) with Ultra of Rome and Corona of Munich, "100,000 Dollars Au Soleil" (100,000 Dollars in the Sun) a thriller made by Henri Verneuil who did "Any Number Can Win" with Trianon and "Mefiez Vous Madames" (Look Out Ladies) a picaresque comedy with PAC of Paris and Zebra of Rome.

CORONA

Headed by Robert Dorfman, had the hit Fernandel-Bourvil comedy "La Cuisine Au Beurre" (Cooking With Butter), Vadim's comedy based on the Francoise Sagan play "Chateau En Suede" (Castle in Sweden) with Euro International of Rome, and comedy "Coup De Bambou" (Bamboo Bit) with locals Silver Films, Regina and Films Jean Boyer. Latter also directed this comedy.

GUEVILLE

Run by thesps Yves Robert and wife Danielle Delorme, hit big time with first pic "The Button War" distributed by Warners. This year had another hit about moppets "Bebert Et L'Omnibus" (Bebert and the Train) also handled by Warners, and coproduced "D'Ou Viens-Tu Johnny?" (Where are You From Johnny) with star rocker Johnny Hallyday with Hoche Films and SNC, plus "Rue Des Cascades," a tale of racism finding release hard, with Films De Mai.

CICC

Distrib and production setup, was in four pix via Eddie Constantine action comedy "A Toi De Faire Mignon" (Your Tune, Baby) spy actioner "OSS 117 Se Dechaine" (OSS 117 Cuts Loose) alongside PAC and Mediterannee of Rome, the two gimmick pix on a breakup of a couple seen by man and wife "Francoise ou La Vie Conjugale" (Francoise or Conjugal Life) and "Jean Marc ou La Vie Conjugale" seconded by Terra Films of France and Jolly of Rome, and gangster thriller "Symphonie Pour Un Massacre" with French coproducer PECF and Italo Dear Film.

COPERNIC

The production arm of distrib UFA-Comacico was in for three via gangster comedy "Faites Sauter La Banque" (Hold Up the Bank) along with PAMEC of Rome, Jean Gabin starrer "Maigret Voit Rouge" (Maigret Sees Red) seconded by Titanus of Rome, and "La Mort D'Un Tueur" (Death of a Killer) with Cinedial of Rome. Under UFA Comacico did comedy "Pouic-Pouic" with Story Film and Erdey of Paris.

PARIS FILM

Under Robert and Raymond Hakim, did "Chaire De Poule" (Gooseflesh), a thriller, with Pathe locally and Interopa of Rome, and "La Ronde," a sex comedy of Roger Vadim with same two coproducers. Pathe, which has theatres and distributes, and recently combined with state owned UGC, also having production, distrib and exhib facilities, was content to mainly coproduce and distrib this year but will go into more production next year as well as continue coproduction for product.

COCINOR-MARCEAU

Headed by Edmond Tenoudji, has distrib and production but was geared mainly to coproduce this year for product, except for one offbeat item of Roger Coggio "Le Journal D'Un Fou" (Diary of a Madman), and a filler "Inconnue De Hong Kong" (unknown in Hong Kong) "Du Grabuge Chez Les Veuves" (Trouble Among Widows) was done with Laetitia of Rome and "Des Pissenlits Par La Racine" (Salad by the Roots) with Columbia and Transinter of Rome, and "Voir Venise et Crever" (See Venice and Die) with Metzger & Woog of Paris, Adelfia of Rome and Eichberg Film of Munich.

SPEVA & CINE ALLIANCE

Headed by Michel Safra and Serge Silberman, respectively, did Luis Bunuel's "Le Journal D'Une Femme De Chambre" (Diary of a Chambre-maid), with Jeann Morcau, along with Dear Film of Rome and Filmsonor, of Georges Lourau in Paris. Latter gave up distrib arm Cinedis. "Gibraltar" was done by the same group as above with Tecis Film of Madrid also in on it.

ARIANE

Usually does its pix under full United Artists backing with UA releasing worldwide. It had "The Train," with Burt Lancaster and directed by John Frankenheimer, made as a French pic via two versions and split technicians and a codirector, and the all-French "L'Homme De Rio" (The Man From Rio) with Jean-Paul Belmondo but made practically entirely in Brazil.

LUX

Also distributes and was in on "Humor Noir" (Black Humor), a French-Italo sketch pic with Emmepi Cine of Rome, "Un Mari and Prix Fix" (A Husband at Regular Rates) with Progefi, headed by Christine Gouze-Renal, of Paris and CCF of Paris and "Rien Ne Va Plus" (No More Bets) with France Vedette Films and CCF.

UGC

Governmental and municipal setup, with distrib and exhib arms, was in on "Comment Trouver Vous Ma Soeur? (How Do You Like My Sister?) with Mannic Films and Sirius. "La Foire Aux Cancres" (Dunce Fair) with Raoul Ploquin Films, Alkam and Sirius, and "Cherchez L'Idole" (Find the Idol), capitalizing on rock stars, seconded by France Cinema Prod., Mannic Films, Sirius and Adelphia Films in Rome.

PATHE

Besides the two pix with Paris Films Production mentioned above, "Gooseflesh" and "La Ronde," also produced "Comment Supprimer Son Prochain" (How to Kill One's Neighbor) and macabre comedy with Cimmatel.

CAPITOLE

Michele Morgan starrer "Constance Aux Enfers" (Constance In Hell) with Luxor of France and Balcar of Madrid, and the hit picaresque comedy with Jeanne Moreau and Jean-Paul Belmondo "Peau De Banane" (Banana Skin) with P. Decharme's local outfit Sud-Pacifipue Films.

PARC FILMS

Headed by femme producer Mag Bodard did the sock all-singing offbeater, a hit here, "Les Parapluies De Cherbourg" (The Umbrellas of Cherbourg) coproduced with Gilbert De Goldschmidt's Madeleine Films. 20th has "Parapluies" for France, Belgium and Switzerland and Ely Landau took it for the U.S.

GEORGES DE BEAUREGARD

Recently broke up partnership with Carlo Ponti in Rome-Paris Films and sold share of Jean-Luc Godard's "Le Mepris" (Contempt), with Brigitte Bardot, to Ponti and Joe Levine's Embassy Films. Did two sketch pix using young directors, who will get features if they prove themselves, in "Baiser" (Kiss) and "Chance" (Luck).

FILMEL

Of Eugene Lepicier who is specializing in bringing bestsellers of Academic Francaise members to the screen. After "Climats" of Andre Mourois and "Therese Desqueroux" of Francois Mauriac, did Daniel Rops' "Mort ou Est Ta Victoire?" (Death Where is Thy Victory), a soapy distaffer, this year.

BELSTAR

Backed by 20th-Fox and headed by Andre Hakim who produces or picks pix for 20th-Fox investment for distrib rights. His first "La Bonne Soupe" (The Good Soupe), with Films Du Siecle of France and Dear Films of Rome, was a sexploitation comedy hit here.

SNC

Distrib setup and coproduces with Raoul Levy's ITTAC in putting his bogged down "Marco Polo" on the road again as "L'Echiquier De Dieu" (God's Chessboard) with PRO-DI of Rome and Yugoslav investment. UA is reportedly in on it too. SNC also only coproduced the hit Bourvil comedy "Un Drole De Paroissien" (A Funny Parish Type) with Films D'Art, ATICA, Corflor and Panorama Films all of Paris.

CIPRA

Backed by MGM coin and run by Jacque Bar. Only one English and French production "The Love Cage" with Jane Fonda and Alain Delon and directed by Rene Clement. French monicker is "Le Crime Et Ses Plaisirs" (Crime and Its Pleasures).

FILM ROITFELD

Two Eddie Constantine actioners with "Laissez Tirer Les Tireurs" (Let the Snipers Snipe) with Fida of Rome, and "Des Frissons Partout" (Scares Everywhere) with J. Manzon of Paris and Fida, again, of Rome.

FILMS D'ART

Besides being in on above mentioned "A Funny Parish Type," has actioner "Le Gvos Coup" (The Big Job) with Electra, Films Longchamps and Inter Telefilms, all of Paris.

BELLES RIVES

New company founded by actor Michel Ardan whose first was a Brigitte Bardot-Anthony Perkins comedy starrer "Une Ravisante Idiote" (A Ravishing Idiot) coproduced with Flora Film of Rome.

FILM JEAN GIONO

Founded by the noted writer Jean Giono and actress Andree Debar to film Giono's books. This year it was "Un Roi Sans Divertissements" (A King Sans Distractions) which garnered critic prizes.

ULYSSE PRODUCTIONS

Pierre Roustang specializes in sketch pix made in different countries with leading directors. This year was "Les Plus Belles Escroqueries Du Monde" (Greatest Swindles in the World) with such directors as Polish Roman Polanski, French Jean-Luc Godard, Italo Ugo Gregoretti, local Claude Chabrol. Coproduced with Vides Film in Rome and Toho in Japan.

FILMS TREIZE

Young director Claude Lelouch who did offbeater on escaped sex murderer "Avec Des si" (With a Big Yea).

A. J. FILMS

Newcomer Alain Jessua who made prizewinning but unreleased comedic-macabre look at married life "La Vie A L'Envers" (Life Backwards).

DELSOL FILMS

Paule Delsol who made "La Derive" (Dritfing) a sharp look at young females by a fine new femme director.

CFPC

Gave Georges Franju's successful reincarnation of early silent day thriller pix in "Judex" with Comptoir Francais Du Film Prod. of Paris and Filmes of Rome.

CARROSSE

Is noted director Francois Truffaut's own company and he made a study of adultery "Le Peau Douce" (The Soft Skin) with coproducers in Sedif and Simar Films.

HOCHE

Belongs to Ray Ventura, and, besides "Where Do You Come From Johnny," made a macabre comedy "L'Assassin Connait La Musique" (The Murderer knows the Score) with Maria Schell.

NOUVELLES EDITIONS DE FILMS

Prizewinning Louis Malle pic "Le Feu Follet" (Will-O'-The-Wisp).

MEDITERRANEE

Headed by Georges Cheyko, produced the 70m color actioner "La Tulipe Noire" (The Black Tulip) with Alain Delon. Mizar Film of Rome and Agata Film of Madrid coproduced.

FILMS DE LA PLEIADE

Pierre Braunberger with exploitation item "La Difficulte D'Etre Infidel, ou Le Bonheur Conjugal" (Difficulty of Being Faithful or Conjugal Happiness), coproduced via Cocinor Marceau of Paris and Mercuria and Cine Zidi of Rome.

TRANSCONTINENTAL

Paul Graetz's one annual production "L'Appartment Des Filles" (Girls' Apartment) with Prod. Intercontinental of Rome and Consul Film of Munich.

FILMS UNIVERS

Jose Benazeref goes on making filler sex exploiters, and directs, with "Cover Girls," Cine Gai of Rome coproduced, and "Dvogue De Vice" (Drug of Vice) alone.

FILMATEC

Actioner "A Couteaux Tires" (Drawn Knives).

BOREAI

Mixture of story and documentary of love tale during a cruise of the liner France via "Les Amoureux Du France" (Lovers of France) with Francois Reichenbach and Pierre Grimblat directing. Stella Film of Italy coproduces.

FILMS NUMBER ONE

New company of ex-pub man Pierre Kalfon that statred with a hit in small budgeter "Dragees Aux Poivre" (Sweet and Sour) which kided esoteric pix and cinema truth films and had many big names doing small parts. Now winding "Aimez Vous Les Femmes" (Do You Like Women) a macabre tale of a sect that likes to eat nubile, pretty girls. Coproduced first pic with Antonio Cervi of Rome and seconded with Francoriz of Paris and Rome.

Check, too, some one-shot pix by obscure production outfits which may make coproductions later, or not, depending on status of the entry of the year. For example Seymour Prod.'s "La Bande a Bobo" (Bobo's Gang) a gangster opus, Sinpri's "La Bete De Vaccares" (Beast of Vaccares) a tale of the plains section of France, Paris-Cannes Prod.'s "Le Bluffeur" (The Phony) about a climbing ruthless type Films Griffon-Aicinter's "Chiennes De Soledor" (Bitches of Soledor) about rapacious women fighting over a treasure, Horizon's "La Confession De Minuit" (Confession of Midnight) a tale of the adventures

A FAD IS NOT A REVOLUTION

French Distribution Not Ideal

Paris.

Admittedly the distributors of France are somewhat disorganized, and that explains in part their troubles. Distributors derive no aid but instead provide aid (to producers) in the shape of advance guarantees. The system here tends to see exchanges in hinterland cities loaded with product of many different companies. In short, sub-distribution operates, and remains a subject of criticism.

Only 10 companies, if which seven are American and three French, undertake nation-wide handling of product. France has some 60 regional selling-booking offices, 18 for the French, 42 for the Americans.

Nine companies with different depth appendages service all parts of the country via three Paris groups with eight agencies and six provincial companies with 14 agencies. Some 13 Paris offices have agents in the hinterlands and 94 smaller outfits have offices in Paris and the seven other key cities, namely, Bordeaux, Lille, Lyon, Marseille, Nancy, Rennes and Strasbourg.

A breakdown by the Centre Du Cinema recently gave the facts that six French distribution groups had 29.5% of the overall take and seven U.S. majors were in for 34.5% while nine French outfits, covering different parts of the country, made for 9.6% and 130, limited to one region, came in for 26.3% of the total.

Too many distribs have too modest an economic keel to keep afloat too long and their participation has become too important to producers to have them vanish. Some combining of forces has turned out well and further combos are in the offing.

U.S. majors make up about 84.7% of the pix circulated here if some locals have Yank pix and Walt Disney has his own brand of distribution. British and other nationalities also get fairly full regional treatment.

Main distrib breakdown for lead key regions is as follows:

1—Top French: CFDC (which includes UGC, Sirius, Pathe). Dicicfrance (includes ADEF), Gaumont (includes Cinedis) (have a branch in all spots.

2—Ditto Yank majors: United Artists, Columbia, MGM, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Universal and Warner Bros.

Then come three Parisian groups with multiple agencies covering various sections like:

1—Comacico with its own in Marseille and Paris using P.H.T. Selections in Bordeaux, Nord Films in Lille, Dodrumex in Lyon and Est in Strasbourg.

2—Cocinor with Cocinor in Paris, Lille, Lyon, Marceau in Marseille and Cocinor in Strasbourg with France Dist. in Bordeaux.

3—CFF with CFF in Paris and Strasbourg.

Follows six regional outfits with AMLF in Bordeaux, Lyon and Marseille, Rhodanienne Co. Du Films in Lyon and Marseille, Midi Cinema in Bordeaux, Marseille, Alba Films in Lyon and Marseille, Oceanic in Bordeaux, Lyon and Marseille and Francfilms in Lyon and Marseille.

Then there are 10 Parisian ristribs who utilize various distribs around the country and have their own setup in Paris. They are Athos Film, Walt Disney, CCFC, Francinor, Imperia, Jeannic Films, SEFC, Lux Prodis, Rank Overseas Film Distributors, Fernand Rivers, Valoria Films and Unidex. And the distrib picture winds with small limited companies, usually for a pic or two, in the various keys with 27 in Paris, 11 in Bordeaux, 14 in Lille, 12 in Lyon, 18 in Marseille, four in Nancy, seven in Strasbourg, and one in Rennes.

French Chances for 1964 'Grandeur'

Did Poorly at '63 Festivals But Present Contenders Seen More Promising

Paris.

France did not fare too well at the important film fests of 1963. It hopes to do better this year. Fests can still mean prestige and sales, especially for certain kinds of product. Last year's weakness in prizes hurt.

At its own shindig at Cannes in '63, France saw its own Marina Vlady getting the thespian nod in an Italo pic "The Conjugal Bed" and a script award going to a Rumanian pic "Codine" made by French director Henri Colpi.

At Berlin it was a goose egg for France and at Locarno only a nod for two cinema-truth interview pic on youth "Hitler? Never Heard of Him!" of Bertrand Blier. But it was more a special mention. At Moscow it was again only a special mention for the comedy pic "The Suitor" of Pierre Etaix.

San Sebastien gave Robert Enrico a best direction award for his sketch pic "Au Coeur de La Vie" (At Heart of Life), based on American Civil War tales by Ambrose Bierce, which has yet to be released in France. At Venice a special jury prize went to Louis Malle's "Le Feu Follet" (Will-O'-The-Wisp) and acting nod to Delphine Seyrig for Alain Resnais' offbeater "Muriel" (UA).

There, too, a "best first feature" award went to Chris Marker for his leftish documentary "Le Joli Mai" (In the Merry Month of May).

At Cannes this year the French Syndocat of Film Producers will give Golden Ducat awards for the first time to a French and foreign film it considers most likely to succeed at the wickets and which have not been sent to festivals.

Be that as it may. Separately, there seems to be some possible fest-slanted pix that will have the French colors riding to possible prizes. Francois Truffaut's tale of edultery "La Peau Douce" (Soft Skin) is one as is Jacques Demy's "Les Parapluies de Cherbourg" (Umbrellas of Cherbourg) an all-singing poetic pic about young love.

Spanish-via-Mexico director Luis Bunuel, who started his career in Paris in 1930 with the surrealist "Age of Gold," has done "Le Journal D'Une Femme De Chambre" (Diary of a Chambermaid) with Jeanne Moreau. Its sharp look at French turn-of-the-century life is felt to make cogent observations on humanity in general and it is being prepped for fest use.

Add some sharply made suspense items by Rene Clement, "The Love Cage," and Henri Verneuil, "10,000 Dollars in the Sun," a swashbuckler in 70m by Christian-Jaque "La Tulipe Noire,"

GADGET-LADEN FRANCE ALTERS

Paris.

According to one of the leading bookers of firstrun houses in Paris, the general patronage has changed radically the last few years. He now just would not book the more obscure, arty and esoteric items that were moneymakers for a time and even played off in the hinterlands for surprisingly good results.

It was only in 1959 that all that New Wave product hit. At that time newcomers, mostly buffs and ex-critics, kindled a fresh filmic flair. Moreover they dealt with certain realities of French life which had not been looked at by regular filmmakers since the war. With this development came a free-wheeling technical zest plus plenty of iconoclasm.

So a certain youthful amorality, disorientation, and disgust with the previous generation's hypocritical outlooks showed up on screen. Momentarily the more solid and academic methods of filmmaking looked obsolete. Some boasted to that effect.

Jump cuts abounded, but somehow underlined the pungent dialog and racy action. Gray lighting, on-the spot shooting, new faces, low budgets all also gave the flash Wave seeming significance to critics and public alike. It seemed as if almost anybody, especially if young and a critic, could make a feature film. Nothing to it.

Then came the letdown: Too many ordinary pix were made, the public was soon surfeited. Its interest drifted back to regular action, comedy and exploitation fare.

Definitions were confused. Such ex-critics as Francois Truffaut ("The 400 Blows," "Shoot the Pianist" and "Jules et Jim"), Claude Chabrol ("Le Beau Serge," "The Cousins"), Jean-Luc Godard ("Breathless," "Live Her Life" and "Contempt"), and others, the brilliant technician Alain Resnais ("Hiroshima Mon Amour," "Last Year in Marienbad") and the fine filmmaker Louis Malle ("The Lovers), plus old hand Marcel Camus ("Black Orpheus"), were lumped under the "wave."

Their pix all did well. Perhaps they helped Sweden's Ingmar Bergman and Italy's Michaelangelo Antonioni whose more personal films also scored at the b.o. and picked up dates in regular situations in dubbed form. But in the end it proved a fad rather than a revolution.

Many theories are advanced, and, like all generalizations, they may be a lot of heated air mixed with wisdom. It has been felt that at the time of the Wave, and so-called art and specialized pic hits, France was still not in the more affluent phase it is today. So films dealing with weightier subjects and themes, to wit, the existence or not of God, the difficulties of love and communication, the A-Bomb, youthful delinquency or muddlement, and others, got a special sympathy and attention.

But as the means for getting frigidaires, cars, household appliances came into the reach of France's middle class, those who usually went to cinema of search-

Screen Leadership for France: Native, 50%, U.S. 33%, Italy 17%

Paris.

Of the 60 top grossing Paris firstrun features this past film fiscal year, 20 were American. Since Paris usually sets the general pace for France it again points up that U.S. pix are holding their usual one-third-of-market. France's own share is about 50% with Italy coming up to over 17% and the rest split among other producing nations.

However, filmgoing in France still fell about 7%. If more individual films scored over 100,000 admissions than last year, too many did less than usual. This state of affairs has prevented quickie product cashing in on the 14% aid since poor grosses means little aid. It goes according to overall take.

There is no doubt there was a perking of admissions for entertaining and exploitation features. Art fell off. (See separate story).

"How The West Was Won" (MG-Cinerama), "West Side Story" (UA) kept up their respective longrun paces with over 700,000 admissions for each. Next came "The Great Escape" (UA) followed by "Cleopatra" (20th) which, if not up to expectations, took 372,-007 admissions in its 14 week firstrun.

Other Yank grossers were Jerry Lewis "The Nutty Professor" (Par), Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds" (U), "Charade" (U), and UA's British entry "Tom Jones." Came two actioners via oldie oater "Arrowhead" (Par) and "Donovan's Reef" (Par), a reissue of Walt Disney's "Pinocchio" and "The Bridge on the River Kwai" (Col), "Hud" (Par), "A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World (UA) still in its early run, "The Cardinal" (Col), "Come Blow Your Horn" (Par), "The V.I.P.'s" (MG), "PT Boat 109" (WB), "Kings of the Sun" (UA), a reissue of "Detective Story" (Par) and "All Quiet on the Western Front" (U).

French hits were also mainly lightweight except for ex-waver Jean-Luc Godard's Brigitte Bardot starrer on the breakup of a couple, "Contempt." Otherwise it was a satirical gangster opus "The Gentle Gunmen," a con-man situation comedy "Banana Skin," a moppet pic "Bebert and the Train," a Fernandel comedy "Cooking With Butter," a picaresque look at a man who robs poor boxes "A Funny Parish Type," a detective opus "Maigret Sees Red," a compilation pic on animal life "The Animals" and a comedy takeoff on cinema truth and esoteric highbrow pix "Sweet and Sour."

A look at last year's firstruns in Paris and key cities also denoted a penchant for big-scale fare and action pix. Pix taking over 500,000 entries were "The Longest Day" (20th), with over a million, "West Side Story" (UA), "How The West Was Won" (MG), French gangster holdup pic "Any Number Can Win," made by Metro-backed local company, Cipra, "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col), Brigitte Bardot opus "Love on a Pillow," (which flopped Stateside), and "55 Days at Peking."

Others were a reissue of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," the Italo "The Leopard," the French comedy in the silent tradition "The Suitor," "Hatari" (Par), French costumer "Mysteries of Paris," robust Italo sex comedy "The Conjugal Bed," French courtroom drama made by another Metro-backed setup, Gaumont International, "The Sword and the Balance," sketch pic "Devil and 10 Commandments," French comedy "How to Succeed in Love," "Taras Bulba" (UA), French Nazi occupation drama "Vice and Virtue," French murder drama "Good Causes," another local sketch pic "The Four Truths" and "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" (Par).

And then more advanced pix, that shed light on deeper human problems and outlooks, or commented on life, also managed to have okay adhesion if not the attention of yore. However many of the spectacle and action pix were judged as deep and successful in their unveiling of a story of human aspiration or life as many of the so-called art pix.

Claude Chabrol's "Landru," a serio-comedy on the French woman murderer, got 306,767 admissions around France followed by Orson Welles' "The Trial." Next came a compilation pic on the Spanish Revolution "Die In Madrid," a Greek tragedy handled by UA, "Electra," a reissue of the pre-war "Wuthering Heights," the French Oscar-winner "Sundays and Cybele" which did better than it might have here due to sock reviews in the U.S. which rebounded here.

At 213,210 admissions came Jean-Luc Godard's tale of a girl slipping into prostitution but not giving herself in "Live Her Life," "8½" only for 190,573 in spite of the reviews, fest prizes and attention it received, Joe Losey's look at a femme fatale in the Italo-French "Eva," Jacques Demy's tale of a femme gambler "Bay of Angels," the Japanese prizewinner "Harakiri" and a compilation French pic on World War I "14-18."

As VARIETY goes to press on this International Film Edition, pix that look like they might turn neat nipups at the b.o. are the Yank "Victors" (Col) and "Seven Days In May" (Par), the U.S. indie "David and Lisa," French drama "The Diary of a Chambermaid," directed by Luis Bunuel, the all-singing French pic "Umbrellas of Cherbourg," which may also give pic musicals a newer lease on life here. French comedy actioner "The Man From Rio" (UA), the bawdy French item "The Good Soup" and some others.

Product Unreeled In Paris Last Year

Paris.

A general check of films on Paris screens during 1963 suggests the scope of the requirements. Of the 357 new films, 104 were French or French-majority coproductions. There were 91 dubbed features of U.S. origin.

Unreeled were 39 made with Italy, two jointly with Italy and Germany, two with Italy and Spain and one each with Gabon, Italy and Austria, Spain, Brazil and Rumania. There were 35 coproductions in which France was the minority party, to wit: 20 with Italy, eight with Germany, three with Spain, three with Spain and Italy and one with Germany and Italy together.

Besides Yank dubbed pix there were 20 British French-sync entries, five German, 53 Italian and 11 Spanish. Then came 24 from Argentina, Belgium, Holland, Hungary and Switzerland for one each, four Japanese, three Mexican, seven Soviet pix, two Swedish and three Yugoslav films.

There were also 14 foreign pix shown in titled versions only with two American, two British, three Italian, one Argentine, one Indian, two Mexican and one each from Poland, Portugal and Russia.

Sex Kitten Bardot Holding Her Own As Most Dependable French Export

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

There remains one truly international French film star, namely Brigitte Bardot. This sex kitten may be falling off at the b.o. in certain countries, but anything she is in is still probably headed for worldwide sales.

And, in her last pic, "The Contempt," directed by Jean-Luc Godard, she proved she is now an actress of some stature, when intelligently used. Besides her, there are four rising male and female thesps who have carved niches for themselves in various countries and mean business at home.

Jean-Paul Belmondo is a dynamic thesp who is at home in comedy and drama and big on the Latin marts. He pulls a Douglas Fairbanks in his latest "The Man From Rio" which UA backed and has for world marts.

Alain Delon was in (with Jean Gabin) the hit Metro-backed, via local company Cipra, "Any Number Can Win," that established him a star in Japan and brought big attention in the U. S. He is now set for a pic to be made in English by his own company with a Yank director and recently wound the English-French versioned "The Love Cage," opposite Jane Fonda, also made by Cipra.

Jeanne Moreau is a solid local name and also means quality in a pic. She speaks good English and has also appeared in the "The Victors" (Col). She has a meaning for art house buffs abroad and may emerge an international pic name of stature.

Annie Girardot is mainly noted here and in Italy where she made "Rocco and His Brothers. She is also a versatile thesp and recently starred in the hit comedy "The Good Soup," made by 20th-Fox which bankrolled Belstar here. Her foreign potency is also on the upswing.

The Veterans

Such oldtimers as Jean Gabin, Fernandel, Bourvil, Michele Morgan and Danielle Darrieux are draws here and are fairly well known in the U.S. if not on top star footing there. Ditto still swashbuckling, at 50, Jean Marais. Simone Signoret and Yves Montand have some renown via his pix and her Oscar, but are selective of parts and work rarely.

Robert Hossein works steadily here and also writes and directs at times. However his foreign pull is low beside his internal weight. Eddie Constantine is that Yank actor who is still a potent star in Europe in parody G-Man and gangster pix if still practically unknown in the U.S.

Jean-Claude Brialy is a big star here if still not much abroad as goes for Jean-Pierre Cassel. Marina Vlady, Emmanuelle Riva and Delphine Seyrig all won film fest thesp prizes and have solid names on the Continent, if still mainly for buffs in the U.S., via such pix as "The Conjugal Bed," "Hiroshima Mon Amour" and "Last Year In Marienbad" respectively.

Anna Karina, wife of New Waver Jean-Luc Godard, has made a name here for herself if still not too big abroad, and Maurice Ronet scored in "The Will-O'-the Wisp" which may help to get him known on foreign scenes. Dany Saval did some Walt Disney pix but is still not star quality either here or over there. Singer Charles Aznavour has had good European exposure and is a pic star of worth in Europe if more known as a singer in the U.S.

That about sums up the leading pic leads in French films that carry power for foreign, and U.S., marts. There have been attempts to fit the rock stars into pix but none have clicked as yet on this front if they are important disk and in-person singing stars.

Fear U.S. Treasury Crimping France's Actors Contracts

By LEE N. STEINER

(Of the New York law partnership of Hess Mela Segall Popkin & Guterman).

The Internal Revenue Service announced in a ruling issued on March 30, 1964 that it has modified its position on the exemption of professional earnings as provided in the United States—French Income Tax Treaty (Rev. Ruling 64-92, I.R.B. 1964-12, 25). This ruling directly affects actors and actresses who are French residents but are working in the United States.

Prior to the ruling it would appear that a French actor or actress under a contract of employment with a United States and/or corporation to perform services in the United States for less than 183 days would be exempt from United States income tax under Article 10 of the United States—French Tax Treaty. Inasmuch as the Treaty is based on reciprocity between the United States and French taxing authorities, the recent modification was brought about due to the fact that the French tax authorities advised the United States tax authorities that they deemed it expedient to modify the Tax Treaty.

The new ruling modified Article 10 of the Treaty so that the exemption for persons exercising a liberal profession applies only to such persons who are exercising that profession on their own account and not as an employee under a contract of employment. The effect of this modification can be seen by examining the two pertinent articles of the United States—French Tax Treaty.

Article 9 of the Tax Treaty can be liberally interpreted to mean that a French resident who performs personal services in the United States is exempt from United States income tax provided that:

a) He is not present in the United States for a period or periods aggregating more than 183 days during the tax year;

b) Such services are performed for himself or on behalf of a French corporation; and

c) He is not exercising a liberal profession.

Article 10 of the Tax Treaty provides that the income from the exercise of a liberal profession shall be taxable only in the United States if the actor or a French corporation with whom the actor is employed has a fixed center of activity in the United States. Thus, it was possible until the new ruling came along for a French actor to work in the United States and not

Three-Year Check Shows Directors 'Lay Off' Plenty

Paris.

A study of film director activity shows that in the years, 1961 to 1963, 154 directed 287 films. Eight directed more than five pix; 88 made one while 44 of the practicing filmmakers did nothing at all. In 1963, 70 directors completed features.

Those who did six were Bernard Borderie, who makes mainly actioners, Jean-Luc Godard who works fast and still does arty stuff, Georges Lautner who specializes in gangster parodies. Directors of five were Michel Boisrond on small budget situation comedies primarily, Claude Chabrol with more weightier fare, Jean Girault for family comedies, Gilles Grangier who works mainly with Jean Gabin, Fernandel and Bourvil in comedies or adventure pix, and Roger Vadim, who discovered Brigitte Bardot, and still does mainly slick sex items.

Size of Stages, French Studios

Paris.

Several French theatrical feature studios have been converted to television or footage production or have disappeared. Victorine Studios in Nice, on the Riviera, may be razed soon. Against which projects two centres at Colle Le Loup and St. Raphael down there are pending.

In 1963 only 63% of the studio potential was used. Following is a lineup of the studios and their space and facilities. Main studios are in the Paris area, usually in nearby suburbs, as per Eclair in Epinay, Franstudio in Saint-Maurice, Paris Studios in Billancourt, Boulgone in Boulogne, Studios Jenner in Paris itself. Add Victorines in Nice and the Neuilly-Cote D'Argent in Bordeaux.

Eclair has five stages which are given in metres, there are 39 inches in a metre, and all measurements will be given in them, thusly:

A-37 by 11.6 by 6.4
B-24 by 11 by 5
C-25x13x6
E-18x11x5

There are also special still studios, mixing and sound, editing rooms, a commissary, carpentry, projection rooms and over 15,000 square metres of exterior space.

Franstudio has seven sound stages plus two swimming pools which can be ued for any sort of water needs and two cranes. Small exterior aspects.

B-15x13x7
C-32x17x9
D-32x17x10
E-28x18x10
F-37x17x7
G-45x32x14

Paris Studios has seven stages and some that can be joined with big outside exterior space for big sets plus full sound setups as well as a crane and usual eating facilities etc.

A-25x20x12
B-30x16x7
C-14x12x4
D-25x20x8
E-22x8.5x4.5
G-28x20x12

Boulogne has six stages and facilities of underwater photography plus pools (6), one crane, plenty of outside backlot space, sound, editing, projection etc. Is a particular favorite with Yank films shooting abroad and also has required office space.

B-35x22x12
C-30x16x8
D-11.6x6.6x3
F-30x20x11

Studios Jenner belongs to filmmaker Jean-Pierre Meville with three stages and minumum sound setups and some outside terrain.

C-12x6x5.5

Victorines in Nice. Six stages, plenty of exterior land and equipment etc.

A-25x14x6
B-2416x14x6
C-25x14.5x6
D-24.6x14.5x6
F-24x13x5

Neuilly-Cote D'Argent in Bordeaux has three stages and acceptable sound, montage, bar etc.

C-40x25x12

Studios are hired and paid by the day. French style eight hour day is noon to 8 p.m., overtime thereafter. Stages are computed by the square metre at 25c per square metre. Or a film can settle for an overall price over a fixed period of time. Dollies rent for $42 per week, projection is $10 an hour with editing rooms going for $50 a week. Lights, building and installation of sets and renting of all the needed camera equipment are extra. Portable sound setup comes to $55 a day.

Groups of Film Houses In Paris

Paris.

Paris area firstrun situation yield almost 30% of the gross of any release. On top of that the Paris showing sets the tone and probable overall biz for the rest of France.

In the last 10 years Paris exhibition has settled down to 13 groups of houses plus several singles, specialized theatres and arties. The Left Bank has gained seven firstrun houses in the interim. There were none before. Also there's a tendency now to add big nabes to firstrun circuits.

"Showcase" was tried a few times but did not make the dent it has done in metropolitan New York. It seems a pic has to be given a little time to build before it hits its stride here. Still, there are plans for firstrun houses to day-date with the regular groups in the many new housing developments springing up on the outskirts of Paris.

Main theatre groups here are these:

1—Rex, Normandie, Rotonde with 5,934 seats. Two are owned privately and one by a municipal setup. Houses are on Grandes Boulevards, Champs-Elysees and Left Bank. Recently had "Cleopatra" (20th). Has both Yank and local product.

2—Aubert-Palace, Artistic, Gaumont Theatre, Palais-Rochechouart, Folies with 5,514 places catering mainly to French pix and those with more general appeal than more quality and positive aspects. Mainly located in Opera and Montmarte sections. The more general nabes.

3—Berlitz, Marignan, Wepler have 4,870 seats and are strategically located and usually have both exploitation and sometimes quality product.

4—Paramount, Elysees, Lutetia, Select, Lynx, Eldorado shape up with 5,620 places if last two are not always in lineup. Usually have Paramount pix and French entries. Paramount owns its name flagship only but has deals with rest. It is the only Yank major to own its house which it built itself.

5—Paris, Francais, Moulin Rouge, Miramar plays a lot of Columbia product via a deal but has others as well as local pix at times. Well situated around town.

6—Mercury, Madeleine, Max-Linder, Bretagne, Images and Orly Airport, Publicis, comes in for 3,664 seats not counting small seater Orly. Has both good French and Yank product and has key houses on Champs-Elysees, Montmartre and Left Bank.

7—Ermitage, Cameo, Mery, Atlas, Mistral weighs in at 3,325 with good locations and has a lot of 20th-Fox pix but also Universal and other Yank majors.

8—Balzac, Helder, Scala, Vivienne 2,660 seats with usually good French exploitation pix.

9—Ambassade, Richilieu, Gaumont houses with 2,493 seats for both Gaumont pix and Yank entries and Italo ones too. On Champs-Elysees and Montmartre.

10—Colisee, Marivaux 1,964 places usually has French pix of good quality or hypo value.

11—Publicis, Vendome, Gaumont-Rive Gauche at 1,354 seats specializes in arty pix that have caught on with regular as well as buff public. On Champs-Elysees, Left Bank and Opera, pioneered first general releases of Ingmar Bergman pix, those of Michelangelo Antonioni and others.

12—Biarritz, Ursulines, Imperial comprise 1,441 seats and mainly good or even art product. On Left and Right Bank and has done well with "Viridiana," a Hispano pic of Luis Bunuel, Greek "Electra" and is now socko with "Tom Jones" (UA).

13—Raimu, Saint-Severin amount to 408 seats and a recently formed duo for foreign and local offbeaters or unusual pix.

It should be noted that most Yank pix open with a subtitled version on the Champs-Elysees and the dubbed versions in the other houses of whichever group it opens at.

Also, there are several Champs-Elysees houses that either take over a firstrun of a pic when it quits a group, sometimes opens a pic on its own or with others. Triomphe plays off mainly Metro filler product. And there is the Marbeuf, Monte Carlo, Avenue and Lord Byron while the George V has been given 70m equipment and has "West Side Story" (UA) in its second year. The Napoleon has new and old U.S. actioners.

Some 11 new theatres were built in the last 10 years and there are also a flock of art houses that either open offbeat fare from here or other countries (most indie Yank stuff).

ing content, turned off the cerebral processes.

In 1964, with affluence climbing in France, interest in films is mainly for entertainment and escapist fare. In the process French studios may have lost some of their recent creative momentum.

One showman here remarks that the last two Ingmar Bergman pix were flops and "Winter Light" has yet to play here and he would not touch "The Silence" in spite of its great publicity and sexploitation angles, besides its highbrow aspects.

De Gaulle Prosperity

De Gaulle prosperity invites family pix. Youth is not as apt to opt for offbeaters as heretofore. They want slick, racy and actionful pix and the general b.o. returns for the last two seasons seem to reflect this shift of preference, though exceptions can, of course, be enumerated.

What were the top 10 of the present season so far? First came "The Great Escape" (UA) an adventurous, boy-scoutish look at prisoners of war; a French gangster farce "The Gentle Gunmen"; the big-scale, big-monied "Cleopatra" (20th); a local picaresque situation comedy "Banana Skin"; a moppet pic for families "Bebert and the Train"; a Fernandel broad comedy "Cooking With Butter"; Jerry Lewis in "The Nutty Professor" (Par); the Hitchcock thriller "The Birds" (U); a comedy suspenser "Charade" (U); a French satire on church poorbox robbers "A Funny Parish Type."

Call it a lot of fast, slick and proven entertainment values. They all took over 200,000 admissions in Paris firstruns alone, which usually sets the general national tone.

But lower down the list were a few cerebral-type pix and some with more unusual aspects that still managed to interest filmgoers and draw that unstable evolved crowd back. Jean-Luc Godard's insidey "Contempt," with Brigitte Bardot, got 190,000 patrons and had the same personalized, talky aspects and transference of ideas into filmic symbolism as his other pix. But it went over well.

And Louis Malle's austere look at suicide "The Will-O'-The-Wisp" did all right as did "Tom Jones" (UA), using change of pace techniques, and a compilation pic on the life of animals "Les Animaux."

Resnais' hermetic "Muriel" (UA), on memory, and using flash cuts for emphasis and atmosphere, was able to get 90,000 people if it fell way below "Hiroshima" and the even more inaccessible "Marienbad." And last year one comedy, a return to silent sources, Pierre Etaix's "The Suitor," did well, as did the macabre comedy on the French Bluebeard "Landru," of Chabrol, Orson Welles' Kafka-based pic "The Trial," Godard's dry but feeling look at prostitution "Live Her Life," a study of gambling phobia "Bay of Angels" and master-servant relationships in "The Depths."

But they only did well, if "Suitor" was a sock hit, while the lead moneymakers were still specs and proven actioners like "The Longest Day" (20th), a local gangster thriller "Any Number Can Win," and other good playoff fare.

Many Parisian tradesters seem to feel the true hope for a worthy adult pic is one that can use new and different approaches and techniques and still not alienate itself from the general attendees. The all-singing "Umbrellas of Cherbourg" seems to be one like that. A tender, sentimental tale is given poetic feeling and elan by everything being sung and all jiving to appeal to all types of brows.

And a young producer Barbet Schroeder thinks that 16m may be the thing. He is producing a pic with noted directors all doing sketches in this format. "Paris Neighborhoods" get government handouts for using historic and noted backgrounds but goes its way in content. He things that a chain of 20 houses in 16m would pay off these films.

If they clicked they could be blown up to 35m or be shown in 16m in more depth or more pop firstrun situations. Still others think deeper pix, made reasonably, still have a chance. But the old style specs, actioners, gangster pix and comedies still set the pace at firstruns.

But still, any art or mass medium has to mirror and comment on society today and innovate to exist and forge ahead. There is a healthy group of noted directors still appearing to do all right if not up to past seasons. But as tv settles down and audiences mature it is felt there will be a place for art and business on world screens.

Of course the abuse of technique and film language, which confuses rather than adds to communication, is also faulting the art pic. But these will disappear and the good ones survive as happened with the Wave, it is thought. A story well told, a point of view, technical prowess without distortion, still will eventually make more headway than unclear experimental or pretentious pix, is the sum-up.

Locals also point out that many young Yank filmmakers have gotten more recognition abroad than on their home grounds via Shirley Clarke, Lionel Rogosin, John Cassavetes, Jonas and Adolfas Mekas, Morris Engel and others, and some French Wavers still make dents abroad if they have slipped here.

The few Cinema-Truth pix that have gotten hardtop release have also fared lacklustre at the b.o. But consensus is that Wave, Truth and other new methods have been absorbed and affected the more general run of pix to have had a benevolent influence if they themselves were not the b.o. panacea. Now, as the festival season starts, the unusual and usual will compete side by side and the ensuing turns at the wickets will show if art pix are still to lag at the b.o. or get or capture public interest again.

pay taxes here provided he worked for less than one-half a year and further, provided that his chief place of business such as his home, his bank account, his office etc. and/or his corporation was in France.

However, under the new ruling, if a French actor performs services as an employee of a French and/or American corporation in the United States he will be according to the new ruling subject to United States income tax.

If, however, a French actor performs services as an independent contractor, i.e., such as a panelist on a quiz show where he is not under a contract of employment, he will not be subject to United States tax provided, of course, he meets the other requirements set forth under the Treaty and listed above. In discussing this ruling with the Internal Revenue Service I learned that it had its origin in France due to the fact that the French taxing authorities taxed American teachers, who were teaching in France. They too, were exercising a liberal profession and the French taxing authorities decided that the American teachers should be taxed in France as long as they were employees of a French school.

It would appear that the above ruling does not affect French producers, directors, cameramen etc. but only affects actors and actresses. The reason for this is that under prior rulings a liberal profession has been defined (as it might affect people in show business) as public entertainers who work for profit.

Due to the fact that there is this new ruling in America and that the ruling was triggered by a prior interpretation of the French Treaty made by the French tax authorities, it is quite probable that the same rulings will govern American actors and actresses who work in France. Assuming that there is already in existence a ruling by the French tax authorities similar to the ruling issued by the Internal Revenue Service, American actors working in France would be subject to both French and United States income tax on their earnings as an employee under a contract of employment for services performed in France.

The ruling does not affect contracts entered into prior to March 23, 1964 or does it in any way modify the provisions of other tax treaties such as the treaties now in existence between the United States and the United Kingdom, Italy, Germany, etc.

Extension Of French Film Aid Law Seen

Paris.

The extension of the Film Aid Law, which gives producers 13% of the local gross towards the next film (in some cases pre-production handouts) still has to be ratified by the Ministries of Finance and Economic Affairs. Ministry of Culture has already ratified it. But these two signatures look likely.

Aid technically runs out next June but would then be lengthened to Dec. 31, 1965. By that time, if the Common Market has not solved a way of doing away with aid to all signatory countries and substituting a central ECM aid coffer, it likely will be prolonged again.

It does not seem likely that general overall ECM aid will be ready for some time and local aid in Italy and France will go on, with Germany also trying to intitute the same. Meanwhile it seems clear that the industry here could not continue without some kind of governmental underwriting.

And French exhis, who were cut off from handouts in 1960, are again clamoring for a reinstituting same. Syndicate of French Exhibitors has already talked with governmental film reps and some modus vivendi, with a probable exhib cut of collections at the bio., may be in the offing.

Some measure of bullishness in all this is the fact that so far this season more pix have done well than last year. There seems to be a public return to the cinema. Overall attendance still fell but certain pix did better than ever.

Object All Sublime at Venice: To Make Festival Fit the Times

By PROF. LUIGI CHIARINI
(Director, Venice Film Festival)

Rome.

The effort initiated last year and designed to bring back the Venice Film Festival to a more clearly artistic and cultural plane has brought its first results. There is no doubt that the 1963 "Mostra," as the press of the entire world has since confirmed, was of a high artistic level and interested everyone, not only for those cultural aspects, but also for the variety of films shown, films representing all trends of world cinema, from the documentary survey to "cinema truth," from the features of romantic inspiration ("Le Feu Follet"), to the gay and/or spectacular ("Tom Jones," "Dragees au Poivre," "Hud").

Now, basing myself directly on the experiences of last year, I've felt it opportune to make some changes in the regulations for our 25th yearly event. These changes are of substantial importance both for the scope of the Mostra, and for the participants in the event. In the first place, I wanted the nomination of the jury, and the announcement thereof to take place very early, and that this jury should become a truly international one.

And in fact, the seven jury members, Rudolph Arnheim (USA),

All-Flags Money Earnings in Italy

Rome.

Figures recently released by ANICA, the Italian trade association, estimate the accrued money earned by all foreign films in Italy between 1950 and 1963 at some $307,360,000. The 14-year total breaks down thusly:

1951	16,320,000
1952	17,600,000
1953	19,200,000
1954	21,440,000
1955	24,320,000

1957	25,120,000
1958	23,840,000
1959	23,840,000
1960	22,720,000
1961	23,200,000
1962	22,400,000
1963	24,160,000
	$307,360,000

(Noted also that while in 1949, the share of the Italo market gross was only 16.2%, total rose to over 47% in 1962.)

Males Overtake Gal Popularities In Italo Films

Rome.

After nearly a decade dominated by the female of the acting species (Gina Lollobrigida, Lucia Bose, Silvana Pampanini, Sophia Loren, Silvana Mangano, to name just a few) and few males (Vittorio De Sica for one), the Italian public has recently set the popularity pendulum swinging decidedly the other way.

Today in Italian films, it's principally the male thesp who sells the admission to the average Italian customer, and a very few such names have in the past year achieved over-the-title star rank.

To be sure, both Sophia Loren and Gina Lollobrigida still exert a vast influence, perhaps vaster than before, but their is now an International ranking and appeal. Besides these two names, there is perhaps only one other female name which has a magic—if more limited appeal—to local customers: Catherine Spaak, who is Belgian, but whose career has been almost entirely shaped here. It's a fast-rising career, but for the moment at least she's still shaded by her male opponents.

Marcello Mastroianni is probably the number one star in the Italian firmament at the moment, and the all-time success of "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" is evidence aplenty. Yet ironically, there are cases where his presence cannot alone determine the success of a picture: his recent "I Compagni,"

WITH AID MAY TOP BIG 1963

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome.

Italy's film industry is biding its time in the confident hope that current discussions concerning a new film aid law — and closely linked moves concerning an unfreezing of vital bank coin—will permit it to follow up its 1963 triumph—a triumph reflected both in prestige-full festival wins and critical plaudits everywhere as well as in increased export collections, with a similar achievement in 1964.

The fact that the current difficulties — and there's no denying that there are difficulties — are principally economic and not artistic or creative are evidenced in the large number of important projects currently being prepared, to be launched as soon as the financial situation has been cleared.

In fact, a number of important productions will get under way regardless of the outcome of current talks, notably Dino DeLaurentiis' "The Bible," a major spectacle directed by John Huston, and Federico Fellini's new film, "Giulietta degli Spiriti," to be filmed under the Angelo Rizzoli banner. DeLaurentiis has subsequent plans, as does Rizzoli, whose company's independent financial stability has made it—and its affiliates (Franco Film and Federiz)—one of the pillars of the industry here. Carlo Ponti, with and without his Stateside contacts, is likewise in for a busy twelvemonth. Ditto for Sancro Films, Vides Films,

MORE & BETTER STUDIOS MARK ROME

Rome.

Despite the uncertain situation in the Italian film industry, there has in the past year been considerable activity in the local film studio field, activity which has drastically changed the local pattern, stable for many years.

First and foremost, Rome now has two practically new film centers: Dino DeLaurentiis' Studio complex on the Via Pontina, between Rome and the sea; and the INCOM Film and Television Centre, completely rebuilt and moddernized on the out-of-town area previously occupied by the same outfit.

Cinecitta continues to have the largest number of sound stages at the old site, but its future remains uncertain. There are assurances on the one hand that it will continue to operate, perhaps under more direct government control; while on the other rumors persist that the close to $50,000,000 real estate potential of the Cinecitta area, which is now about to be surrounded by expanding Roman suburbia, is too inviting an offer, and that the area would be sold and Cinecitta transferred elsewhere, either in an already-existing film complex or built from scratch—and at a profit—using the accrued coin. The next few months should decide the fate of the studios whose name has become symbolic of the Italian pic industry.

Other major changes on the local

Once Crowding Out the Natives, Yank Showmen Return—and Welcome

Rome.

Not very long ago—at the time of "Cleopatra"—there were repeated cries of "foreign monopoly" of Italian studios, complaints that massive take-over of Italo facilities by Yank and other visitors had helped raise prices and were keeping Italian films from being able to rent. But times have changed. Many of the major Italian film plants have seen lean months (the official ANICA analysis of the situation for 1963 notes that while in 1962, studio occupation totals were quite high, the 1963 average occupancy was "under 50%") and only a handful of foreign films ("The Visit" and a few others) kept local technicians and studio personel busy.

The 1964 situation is looking up once more. Fairly certain are plans for a number of Yank pix and/or Yank-Italian joint projects.

"The Agony and the Ecstasy," directed by Carol Reed and with Charlton Heston, Rex Harrison, and others, should get under way under the 20th-Fox aegis at one or more of the Rome Studios and locations in Italy. The Landau Company's "Leonardo" has been announced for a fall start, and an advance team has already scouted local shooting possibilities.

Even more imminent is Delmer Daves' Warners project "The Battle of Villa Florita," with Rossano Brazzi and Maureen O'Hara, due to start May 4 on Italo exteriors. Interiors will probably be shot in Britain.

A number of projects has been disclosed by 20th in addition to "Agony," for Italian shooting this year.

Fred Kohlmar's "A Sleepless Night in Capri," Peter Glenville directing, is listed as a fall starter; Mark Robson should get his "Von Ryan's Express" under way here in July, from the David Westheimer novel; Frank Perry, who spent some time in Rome a year or two ago, is expected back for another—still unnamed—20th project, for which the names Kim

Sexy-and-Sketchy An Italo Format To Harvest Coin

Rome.

The episode feature film is certainly no novelty: the U.S. made several during the war and shortly after, as did the French, to name only two industries.

But certainly the current Italian preoccupation in sketch pix is unprecedented in size and scope. Here the producers, who last year went wild in commissioning dozens of exploitation pix in the "Sexy by Night" genre have now turned to segmen'. ry pix as the sinecure for an uncertain financial situation.

The risks, they argue, are minor. Stars of b.o. importance may be had for less money than for a full film, yet the drawing power is there nevertheless. Name directors can sandwich a sketch stint between major efforts.

As elsewhere, the sketch film in Italy was not born today. There were eminent predecessors, notably "Paisan," followed some time later by "Gold of Naples" and others.

Yet the principal trigger which set off the current boom was probably "Boccaccio 70" and pic's successful run in many areas. Carlo Ponti himself followed up the formula with his even more successful "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow," and has already registered a new one, "Boccaccio 2000" with the title office. Marco Ferreri's "Controsesso," also for Ponti, is another currently-shooting sketch pic.

Discounting the episodic items which followed the slight different and documentarily slanted trend set by "Mondo Cane" and "Women of the World," the local production of episode pix has over the past year been impressive.

"The New Angels," "Italians and Love," "Amore Difficile," "100 Pair of Bulls" were only a few of the 1963 titles. Currently riding high in the b.o. ratings is "High Infidelity," with "Parliamo di Donne," "Frenesia D'Estate," "Amore in 4 Dimensioni" also registering strongly in current release. Others are "I Malamondo," "I Maniaci," "I Mostri" was another recent hit of the same school, only here the sketches were many more than the usual three, four, or five.

Current and future projects indicate the trend will continue. "La Donna e una Cosa Mervigliosa," directed by Mauro Bolognini, is in work; "I Complessi" is com-

Bernardo Bertolucci—Recently completed his second feature "Before the Revolution" on North Italian locations.

Alessandro Blasetti: Vet's most recent pic is "Liola," from the Pirandello story. Currently readying TV survey of Italo pic history.

Mauro Bolognini: His "La Corruzione" in release. Shooting episoder, "Woman is Wonderful Thing," might do "La Suora Giovane" and pic starring Silvana Mangano.

Tinto Brass: Finished second feature effort, "Ca Ira," film clip history of world revolutions; working on future and undisclosed projects.

Mario Camerini: Recently wound two adventure pix, mulling future offers.

Pasquale Festa Campanile: Turned to direction after successful scripting career, teaming with Massimo Franciosa on "Tentativo Sentimentale" and the just-finished "Le Voci Bianche." Next goes solo with "La Costanza della Ragione."

Paolo Cavara: Specialist in documentary features.

Renato Castellani: Follows up his "Mare Matto" with story set in Tuscany, "Mia Sorella Celide."

Duilio Coletti: Plans return to direction with pic tentatively titled "Mademoiselle Docteur" which he'll also produce, followed by "Columbus."

Damiano Damiani: "Empty Canvas" and "La Rimpatriata" were latest, now prepping "Una Zampata di Vita," from own story, for which he'd like Maurice Ronet and Richard Harris.

Giuseppe DeSantis: Long spell on "Italiano Brava Gente" in Russia, currently cutting and scoring final print. No future plans at present.

Vittorio DeSica: "Marriage, Italian Style," with Sophia Loren and Marcello Mastroianni; follows his record-breaking "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow." Pacted to "Paris 1900" for Samuel Bronston in Italy and Paris if pic materializes, and is toying with some oft-postponed projects, including filmization of a Flaubert novel.

Vittorio DeSeta: Long hiatus after his first feature, "Bandits at Orgosolo," now reportedly preparing "Un Uomo a Meta."

Federico Fellini: "Giulietta degli Spiriti" is current project to star Giulietta Masina. In the future, probably another still nebulous project starring Marcello Mastroianni.

Marco Ferreri: Busy year behind, another ahead, after success of "Conjugal Bed." "Ape Woman" is latest, "Controsesso" partly shot, "Il Santone," "I Giorni Fecondi," "El Buscon" are among other projects announced to date.

Massimo Franciosa: After two pix teamed with Festa Campanile, on own with next, "Il Pigro," based on work by Obxlomov.

Pietro Francisci: Started the "Hercules" trend some years back, recently made another, "Hercules, Samson, and Ulysses."

Riccardo Freda: Has started remake of "Romeo and Juliet."

Pietro Germi: "Seduced and Abandoned" reps director at '64 Cannes Film Fest, plans to shoot an episode in a co-op pic in France, also talking future production (not title yet) with Robert Haggiag.

Alfredo Giannetti: "Giorno per Giorno Disperatamente" was first pic for onetime Germi assistant, who follows up with current "Ragazza in Prestito" with Rossano Brazzi and Annie Girardot.

Ugo Gregoretti: "Omicron," screened at last Venice Festival, was most recent, has done TV work, planning feature, costume satire.

Alberto Lattuada: "Il Segreto," based on Henry James' "The American," is upcoming on Lattuada agenda, with Princess Soraya topplining, probably segues with another Soraya starrer. Other plans: "Essere un Mostro," and a Pirandello adaptation.

Carlo Lizzani: "Verona Trial" was last, just wound "La Vita Agra" with Ugo Tognazzi and Giovanna Ralli. Would like to do "La Congiura dei Savoia" and pic on "new" Africa.

Nanny Loy: No pic since Oscar contender, "Four Days of Naples" may do a portrai of an Italian family, pic spanning last 20 yrs.

Nino Manfredi: Better known as stage and screen thesp, but shot episode in "Amore Difficile," would like to try again.

Romolo Marcellini: Export documentary feature maker, with fine "Olympic Games" pic to credit. Plans being set.

Francesco Maselli: Slow, infrequent worker, currently readying "Gli Indifferenti" for release. Pic features Rod Steiger, Shelley Winters, Paulette Goddard, others.

Mario Monicelli: "I Compagni" is latest accomplishment, has also shot some episodes in successful b.o. winners: "Alta Infedelta" is one and will be followed by "I complessi." Other feature offers being considered, including "Cosa Nostra" and "Casanova 70" with Marcello Mastroianni.

Giorgio Moser: Busy in many fields, currently on video kick doing R.L. Stevenson stories, may return to features later.

Ermanno Olmi: Also has done tv work lately, after critical hits such as "Il Posto" and "Fidanzati." Should return to pix with "La Cotta," "Il Viaggio," and/or "L'Albero degli Zoccoli."

Folco Quilici: Specialist in wide-ranging documentary features. Now with Maurizio Lodi-Fe prepping South Seas tale based on R. L. Stevenson work and called "Stories from the South Seas," for Metro release.

Pier Paolo Pasolini: "100 Paia di Buoi" is most recent for this controversial filmmaker, who now plans "Passion According to St. Matthew," among others.

Giuseppe Patroni Griffi: Legit author ("Anima Nera") who turned to film direction ("Il Mare") year ago, now plans pic on Emperor Caligula.

Antonio Pietrangeli: "La Parmigiana," "La Visita" are recent and successful titles, does episode for "I Complessi," also "The Magnificent Uuckold."

Gian Luigi Polidoro: Recently stepped out in fancy fashion with hit, "To Bed or Not to Bed" (Il Diavolo), now should direct "Don't Search for the Cat" in New York, where he's been o.o.'ing locations. Has also acted.

Gianni Puccini: "La Celestina" in agenda.

Renato Rascel: Actor, dancer, composer (Arrivederci Roma), whose previous effort at direction, "La Passeggiata" was unjustly overlooked, acts and directs "Don Vietto," story of a mountain priest.

Dino Risi: Critics around the world have finally discovered Risi, young vet, after "Easy Life," though he's had long and successful career behind him, ably blending quality with commerce. Since has made "Il Giovedi" and is currently winding "Un-Italiano in Argentina" with Vittorio Gassmann, on South American locations. More offers than ever, but one of next could be "Il Sole."

Brunello Rondi: Assisted Fellini on "Dolce Vita" and "8 ½," on own with "Il Demonio," his first solo stint. Next will probably be "Il Piaciere."

Francesco Rosi: His "Hands Upon the City" won the Grand Prix at Venice last year. Rosi now prepping "Spain" for Cineriz, with "Tempo di Uccidere" another title mentioned for him.

Roberto Rossellini: Frequently claims he'll retire, more likely he'll switch to making pix and documentaries for tv.

Franco Rossi: After "Smog," shot episode in "High Infidelity," should do another in "I complessi," with next feature being "Il Domestico," to star Nino Manfredi.

Luciano Salce: "Le Monachine" is recent release, also has participated in wave of episode items. One title being bruited for him is "Inutile Andare a Zanzibar," but unset at writing.

Ettore Scola: Longtime scripter just turned director, and successfully, with "Parliamo di Donne," thus presaging new career.

Steno: Specializes in comedies and/or parodies.

Luchino Visconti: Alternates legit work with pic stints. After "The Leopard" is mulling pic to star Claudia Cardinale, would like to shoot oft-postponed "The Outsider" (from novel by Camus), and is set for 1965 with "Contess Tarnowska" a Romy Schneider starrer.

Lina Wertmuller: Alternates TV and film work. "I Basilischi" won her critical renown first time out as feature director. Now directing video series here, after which she'll probably shoot "Il Dolce e L'Amaro" in Sicily and Rome.

Luigi Zampa: Vet recently completed "Frenesia D'Estate," other projects pending.

Valerio Zurlini: Director of "Cronaca Familiare" has been planning African-based pic some time; also "Il Giardino dei Finzi-Contini," from Giorgio Bassani novel. Now will probably precede rest with "Le Soldatesse," from Ugo Pirro novel, with lensing in Yugoslavia.

Italy Imports Up; 14 Nations Supply

Rome.

Imports of features into Italy rose sharply during 1963, with 388 features brought into the country last year against 291 totaled for 1962, though number of countries selling product to Italo market remained constant at 14. The U.S. rise was notable, up from 150 to 188, though nowhere near previous recent high of 267 set in 1958 and an all-time record for U.S. imports set in 1948 with 668 features.

Country-by-country, the 1963 breakdown looks as follows:

Argentina	1
Czechoslovakia	3
Denmark	1

Italy: One Hit, 10 (Nude) Misses

By SAM'L STEINMAN

Rome.

One film hit in Italy is usually followed by a lot of misses, including the nude ones as well which have to be part of any film which doesn't have anything else to offer. After more than a decade as an observer it's quite obvious when a trend has come into being. A chronological look is enough to prove the thesis.

1. NEOREALISM. There were many more oustanding films in the early postwar trend but four good examples are "Open City," "Bicycle Thief," "Paisan" and "Two Cents Worth of Hope." A raft of new directors immediately armed themselves with cameramen and went into the small mountain towns. Artisans at work, women screaming and wailing, old men sitting along belvederes, donkeys hauling farmers and the like were photographed.

Usually they didn't work with a script but on their return to Rome the "directors" turned their negatives over to an editor who would try to put them together into something or the other resembling a story, sometimes by shooting a few added scenes in the studios. Neorealism was a great thing but it was killed by artificial neorealism generated by those who thought they could manufacture the real article better than it was. All at once the word crisis appeared on the scene and the Italian cinema was in the doldrums. To pun on the pronunciation of the word in the native lingo, the producers no longer had their chin-emas up.

2. THE SUPER SPECTACLE. Stories about the old Roman emperors has always been part of the Italian cinema diet with an occasional foray into the areas of the Bible and mythology.

One of these, picked up by an American distributor, was called "The Labors of Hercules." With a super-promotion he turned it into a big boxoffice hit. The "star," a bit player from Hollywood imported to Italy for his physique and paid about $6,000 for the picture, became a "name." (Steve Reeves is good for better than $100,000 a film today in Italy.

Even his leading lady was almost signed to an American contract until the moguls asked whether she really spoke English and found out that her voice was dubbed both in Italian and in English. (Hollywood made its rep by spending thousands of dollars on players it never used because it didn't ask questions in the old days which just goes to show the good that can come out of a business slump.)

The sensational success of "Hercules" really brought the spectacles into full bloom. History and mythology were combined, periods of history telescoped, charcaters invented and American strongmen imported. The new stars of the Italian cinema became Gordon Scott, Lex Barker, Robert Matthias, Kirk Morris, Ed Fury, Lang Jeffries, Walter Barnes and others. Hercules was superseded by Maciste and in one film, Hercules joined the Goliath to fight Maciste and Samson. In another the Tartars came out of their era to meet the Vikings from another part of the world. Red paint for blood became the staple of the Italian cinema and once again the marketplaces were humming.

The formula worked until some of the boys decided they could pick up the leftovers from the cuttingroom floors for a song and put them together with a few studio shots for new "spectacles." Every set was pirated, wherever possible—no wonder MGM destroyed every trace of "Ben-Hur" except the lake and "Cleopatra" every building of its Roman Forum. If they hadn't they would have been seen by this time in half a hundred cheap Italian "super"-spectacles. However, the cheap spectacles put an end to the heyday of these opuses as effectively as the mock neoralism had done in the last case. Italians may be smart enough to learn but learnig never stopped the "quick-money" boys from trying to make a killing on their own.

3. INQUESTS. Alessandro Blasetti had an idea for a new kind of film five years ago and he made "Europe By Night," a super-vaudeville show which was a great hit. Along came "Paris By Night," "America By Night No. 2, "World By Night No. 3," "Nude Sexy," "Sexy By Night," "Nude World" and others with equally-enticing titles. The night clubs and unusual places of the world were inspected.

Gualtiero Jacopetti offered a new twist with "Mondo Cane,' finding all of the stomach-turning activities of the world and this has now reached "Mondo Cane No. 2," with a number of studio shots. (One mock rite around a seated dead body "in Texas" might get away with it but for the fact that this observer noted a lot of familiar faces from the Via Veneto "beach" in the scene.) The inquest has been riding high on the hog but there have been a number of entrants who, instead of touring the world, have bought stock shots of neo-lit streets from Broadway to Hong Kong, from Johnnesburg to Bombay, and then presented studio shots made with talent appearing in Rome night clubs.

Since Rome is not exactly another Las Vegas the talent has been mediocre at best and the resultant spectacle has served to give a bad name to most of the inquests whose continued life has been abetted by constant censorship of striptease scenes. (The film must be cut the moment a stripper drops her bra but there is no restriction on showing an African in all of her dark glory even if "the African" is an American girl working in a Rome studio.) Once again the goose that laid the golden egg has been dissected and its innards have been found to be nothing worth using. Now the jackals have to wait again.

4. THE OLD WEST. Hollywood and American tv have run a bit dry on the western but in Italy it's the new thing. Only hitch is that the Spaniards have gotten into the act and it's now touch-and-go whether the new home of Tombstone and the Sheriff will be the hills around Rome or the back-country of Granada. But perhaps neither will get a chance at this one.

AMEUROPA

Prepping a Metro releaser, "Letters from the South Seas," based on letters and stories by Robert Louis Stevenson, to be produced by Maurizio Lodi-Fe and directed on South Seas locations by Folco Quilici. Probable start: August.

ARCO

Alfredo Bini about to start Pier Paolo Pasolini's version of "Passion According to St. Matthew," is thinking of pic version of Joseph Conrad's "The Rover," among several others.

ATLANTICA

Marco Vicario's company has "Il Pelo nel Mondo" in current release, plans "Le Ore Nude," Alberto Moravia story which Vicario directs with Rossana Podesta and Keir Dullea toplined; plus a western, "La Carica dei Krinos."

CERVI

Recently wound "Red Desert," Michelangelo Antonioni pic starring Monica Vitti and Richard Harris, in combo with Rizzoli pix. Future plans to be announced.

CINERIZ

Completed "Red Desert" in association with Antonio Cervi. Now plans several major enterprises, beginning with Federico Fellini's new pic, "Giulietta degli Spiriti," starring Giulietta Masina; also Francesco Rosi's "Spain," Gualtiero Jacopetti's "Africa Addio"; and several others in association or coproduction.

Dino Risi's "Il Giovedi" is most recent release. Now in the books: another Risi pic, "Il Sole"; may also do "L'Uomo di Sfiducia," but iffy at present.

DE LAURENTIIS

"The Bible," directed by John Huston, is of course the major item on the agenda here, with weekly cast additions being announced. Also on slate: "The Secret," first pic starring Princess Soraya, with Alberto Lattuada directing, to be followed by another. Alberto Sordi also stars in upcoming DeLaurentiis pic, among others.

DOCUMENTO

Gianni Hecht follows up his hit "Alta Infedelta" with second episoder, "I Complessi," segments directed by Mario Monicelli, Franco Rossi, and Antonio Pietrangeli.

DUILIO

Duilio Coletti's company plans two pix: one, "Northwest Triangle," is a spy thriller based on true, recently-discovered facts, among them the real story of Lord Kitchener's death. Also, "Columbus," from a script by Tullio Pinelli.

FAIRFILM

Mario Cecchi Gori is following up a series of hits which have made him 1963's fairhaired boy ("Easy Life," "Sorpasso," "Mostri," "Parliamo di Donne,") with another Dino Risi-Vittorio Gassmann director-actor pairing in "An Italian in Argentina," shot on S.A. locations. Several other pix in prepping stages.

FEDERIZ

Company closely linked with Angelo Rizzoli will produce next Fellini pic, also probably team with Franca Film on "The Last Day of War," episodic war pic.

FILMAR EXPORT

Filmar, with Cineproduzioni Associate, keeping busy with: "Ten Gladiators," "Vengeance of the Black Knight," "Mondo Balordo," "Universo Probito," finished, and "Hercules and the 7 Challenges" and "Triumph of the Ten Gladiators," in works.

FRANCA

New company has produced two so far, "Tentativo Sentimentale" and "Le Voci Bianche" both directed by Franciosa and Festa Campanile. Latter just winding. Upcoming: Franciosa directing "Il Pigro," based on Oblomov work; Festa Campanile directing "La Costanza della Ragione" this summer, with Samy Frey and Catherine Deneuve. "The Last Day of War" is being planned by Luciano Perugia as a multi-episoder, with 1965 as target date, top directors in several countries megging segments. Franca is linked with Angelo Rizzoli's Cineriz.

JOSEPH FRYD

Among pix recently wound and/or packaged by Fryd are "Naked World," "An Italian in Warsaw," wartime comedy, and "Sandokan." Currently handling worldwide release of "Love in Four Dimensions," episoder. Other plans to be announced.

GALATEA

Production slowdown in Lionello Santi's outfit has resulted in few major pix being readied in recent months. Exception is "Italiano Brava Gente" (in tandem with Embassy Pictures), war time epic lensed in Russia by Giuseppe DeSantis and featuring, among others, Peter Falk and Arthur Kennedy.

INTERFILM

Currently riding higl. in the distrib field thanks to several recent hits, Interfilm also plans to continue to share production credits with other producers, with announcements pending.

I.F.S.

Produced "Blind Man's Buff" in tandem with Spanish company, is currently packaging two more, "Dingo" and "Vendicatore della Primula Rossa." Also active in servicing Europe-based productions, latest being 20th's "Zorba The Greek."

JOLLY-UNIDIS

Recently started "The Magnificent Stranger" western with Clint Eastwood and Marianne Koch in Technicolor-Techniscope, to be followed by "Guns Don't Argue," with Rod Cameron, Horst Frank, Kay Fisher, and Angel Aranda, also an oater.

MALENOTTI

Recently wound "Slaves Still Exist" and "Summer Frenzy," now plans "Il Piaciere," with Brunello Rondi directing from script by Tullio Pinelli. To be coproduced with British company.

POGGI-LIBER

Ottavio Poggi currently on adventure kick with two "Sandokan" items, "Sandokan against the Llon of Sarawak," and "Sandokan Strikes Back," both with Ray Danton and Guy Madison. On agenda: "Richard the Lion Hearted."

CARLO PONTI

Busier than ever, with pix on own, with Metro, and with Joseph Levine's Embassy Pics. Recently wound Marco Ferreri's "Ape Woman" and "Man with Five Balloons"; Ferreri also doing "Controsesso" for Ponti in episodes. Just gunned "Marriage Italian Style," Sophia Loren-Marcello Mastroianni starrer to re-team duo of hit "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow" with Vittorio DeSica again directing. Also slated, "Casanova 70," with Marcello Mastroianni and Mario Monicelli now directing; plus three for Metro: "Doctor Zhivago," "Operation Crossbow," and "Lady L."

PROMETEO

Rudy Solmsen firm recently wound three beefcakers, "Maciste, Gladiator of Sparta" "Gladiator of Messalina," and "Two Gladiators," plans more in still-successful skein.

SANCRO

Henry Croshicki and Alfonso Sansone plan busy slate after hit of "Conjugal Bed": with Walter Reade,, first off will be "The Magnificent Cuckold," Antonio Poetrangeli directing Ugo Tognazzi; last-named also probable for "Don't Search for the Cat," which Gian Luigi Polidoro shoots in Gotham, probably with Yank partnership. Next are: "Il Mestiere di Vivere" directed by Luigi Vanzi and "Magia," directed by Gillo Pontecorvo, both documentary features. Then come an Italo-German-French episoder, "Bettgeschichten" (Bed Stories), with segments by Rolf Thiele, Marco Ferreri, and Georges Lautner, and another Ferreri pic, "El Buscon," to be shot in Spain.

SAN PAOLO

Recently wound "The Patriarchs," now engaged in "Saul and David" with Norman Wooland, followed by "I Giudici" and pic on life of Saint Paul, after which Bible series, planned with scope, continues, each feature about 3 hours long.

TITANUS

Goffredo Lombardo's company currently biding its time, concentrating on distribution of production backlog.

ULTRA

Plans "I Piombi di Venezia," others.

VIDES

Franco Cristaldi, who sold most of last year's Vides product to Walter Reade, including recently released "Bebo's Girl" and 1964 Cannes entry from Italy, "Seduced and Abandoned" is not resting on his laurels. Several plans, titles, names must still be firmed, but roster currently embraces: pic directed by Luchino Visconti and starring Claudia Cardinale; another Claudia Cardinale starrer directed by Luigi Comencini (who made their successful "Bebo's Girl"); new Renato Castellani pic, "Mia Sorella Celide"; a sequel to "Divorce, Italian Style," "Baron Fefe"; Il Futuro," and "The Adventures of a Chinaman in China."

ZEBRA

Moris Ergas recently released "La Visita," has "Ca Ira" in can, has started Mauro Bolognini's "La Donna e una Cosa Meravigliosa" (Woman is a Wonderful Thing), a 3-episoder, plans "Le Soldatesse" (Some Women for the Army) directed by Valerio Zurlini, for a summer start with an International cast.

in which he played a perhaps too offbeat character role, fared well, but not exceptionally, though it was a well-made pic.

Alberto Sordi continues to be a major drawing card for any film in which he appears, and his international impact with some of his more recent films (notably "Il Diavolo"—"To Bed or Not to Bed") has given him added stature. Only in his most recent pic, "Il Maestro di Vigevano" has he encountered some public resistance, though again, the pic paid off handsomely. In this case, audiences who have for years been used to laugh with him or at him were disconcerted by his attempts to go dramatic and even paint a tragic figure. Perhaps he did not bring it off, perhaps the transition was too abrupt; in any case, returns have been disappointing (for a Sordi pic), and thesp had better weigh his next step carefully.

Top Duo

The two "magic" names of 1963-64, however, are Ugo Tognazzi and Vittorio Gassman. Two thesps, former from vaudeville, latter from legit theatre, are able to sell even an indifferent pic, and when pix click, they hit the top figures.

Tognazzi, known abroad for "Conjugal Bed," for which he recently won the Italian Film Critics acting award, is blessed with an "average" Italian face, which allows him a wider range of parts. He can play serious, tongue-in-cheek, and comedy. He is naturally booked solid, and there's hardly a film made here today which doesn't announce him as a star—which does not always mean he'll find time to play role.

Gassman, on the other hand, is ironically disliked (or not sufficiently appreciated) when he's serious, playing straight dramatic roles, preferably classics (which he incidentally does very well). The Italian public has imposed on him the cloak of the ham, likes to see him as the charming ne'er-do-well ("The Easy Life") full of bluff and gusto, sometimes masking a bitter inner frustration. His versatility, within this range, was first demonstrated in a tv series seen here and called "Il Mattatore" (The Ham). Gassman has been playing the "Mattatore" ever since, and the public can't seem to tire of him.

VENICE: NEW DATES & RULES

Venice.

A more compact Venice Film Festival is in view for 1964. Together with new dates for the so-called "minor" festivals, several changes have been approved. Calendar of events now reads as follows:

June 16-18: 6th International Exhibit of Art Films
Aug. 6-16: 16th Festival of Films for Children
15th Festival of Documentary Films
Aug. 27-Sept. 10: Venice Feature Film Festival
Aug. 23-Sept. 10: 9th Film Book and Periodical Exhibit
Nov. 9-15: 9th International Showings of Scientific-Didactic Films (held at Padua University)

As noted, moppet and documentary events have been set back to August to bring them closer to feature event. Previously held in July, they had been felt losing in importance because of relative isolation from other events. Special accent will be placed this year on TV-Films as a separate section of the documentary event, with tv originals being especially sought.

Changes also in the main feature event. Here, prizes may no longer be given jointly. Fest notes that "too often, such awards have merely been the result of compromises among jury members," and and which frequently "left both winners unhappy."

Second innovation gives jury possibility of awarding two special jury prizes instead of usual one, while third switch sees kudos for best first film going only to pix in competition and not, as in past, to films screened out of running (of other prizes) as well.

A final important change this year, previously detailed, sees only one Italian member on jury, instead of the previous 3-4. Already named, Italian is Mario Soldati, writer-director, who will serve as its head. Other members are: Rudolf Arnheim (U.S.A.); Ove Brusendorf (Denmark); Thorold Dickinson (Britain); Ricardo Munoz Suay (Spain); Georges Sadoul (France); Jerzy Toeplitz (Poland). It is one of rare occasions where no Russian member has been designated to Venice jury.

Year That Italy Raked Laurel

In 1963 Industry Scored Remarkably at Mar del Plata, Cannes, San Sebastian, Moscow, Locarno, Acapulco — Did Well Elsewhere

Rome.

Last year, 1963, proved a bonanza year for the Italian film industry thanks to a clean sweep of all major festival prizes around the world. It began when Dino Risi's "Il Sorpasso" (The Easy Life) walked off with best direction honors at the Mar del Plata event in Argentina.

At Cannes, Luchino Visconti's Titanus production, "The Leopard" won the Grand Prix, the Palme D'Or, while Marina Vlady was named best actress for her stint in an Italian film, "Ape Regina" (Conjugal Bed), and Ermanno Olmi's "I Fidanzati" won the O.C.I.C. Catholic Film Office award.

San Sebastian proved another Italo triumph, with Alberto Lattuada's "Mafioso," starring Alberto Sordi, topping the rest to win the Concha de Oro Grand Prix at the Spanish event. Soon after, another Alberto Sordi pic, "Il Diavolo" (To Bed or not to Bed), directed by Gian Luigi Polidoro, came in first at Berlin to win the Golden Bear.

Though the Russians didn't fancy it much, Federico Fellini's "8½" nonetheless kept the Italo string unbroken for another Grand Prize at Moscow while the International Critics Prize at the same fest went to another Italo-made, Nanni Loy's "Quattro Giornate di Napoli" (Four Days of Naples).

Nor was that to be all for the record book. At Locarno, Lina Wertmuller, one of the industry's few femme directors, won best direction honors for her first feature effort, "I Basilischi." Pic also won the critics kudo.

Finally, the impressive local showing, perhaps unequaled by any industry in any single year, was topped by the Gold Lion First Prize award to Francesco Rosi's "Le Mani sulla Citta'" (Hands Upon the City), while Gianfranco DeBosio's "Il Terrorista" won a critical award.

Other prizes were won elsewhere throughout the year. Six Italian features shared the spotlight at the Acapulco Festival of Festivals: "8½," "Sorpasso," "Mafioso," "Diavolo," "Gattopardo," "Mani sulla Citta," with special mentions and awards going to all.

In the U.S., "Divorce, Italian Style" had meanwhile won Italy an Oscar for best screenplay, while, for merits accrued late in the year, Federico Fellini's "8½" also walked off with a New York Film Critics award and the Joseph Burstyn prize presented by the Indie Importers and Distributors of America. "8½" also copped several Oscar nominations.

Who Speaks for Italy

Rome.

Officially, the film industry comes under the Ministry of Tourism & Entertainment, headed by a Minister (currently Socialist Achille Corona) and two Under-Secretaries directly answerable to him. In turn, the "Direzione dello Spettacolo," headed by Franz de Biase, is responsible for all entertainment matters to the two Under-Secretaries. Apart from film matters, "Direzione dello Spettacolo" also is charged with general supervision, in Italy's state-subsidized industry setup, of such various pic activities as production, import, and export, etc., as well as many other subsidized and semi-subsidized sectors of the Italo film industry picture. Herewith other film trade associations and authorities:

Associazione Nazionale Industrie Cinematografiche ed Affini (ANICA)—Overall industry charged with supervision and negotiation problems—with sole exception of exhib sector—both nationally and internationally. President: Etiel Monaco.

Unione Nazionale Distributori Film (UNDF)—National film distributors union, part of ANICA, handling national release problems of member companies, which include Yank outlets in Italy. President: Franco Penotti.

Unione Nazionale Produttori Film (UNPF)—National producers association under ANICA, deals exclusively with problems pertaining to production sector. President: Goffredo Lombardo.

Unione Nazionale Produttori Cortometraggi (UNPC—Grouping under ANICA of Italian producers of newsreels, documentaries, and TV-Films. President: Sandro Pallavcini.

Unione Nazionale Industrie Tecniche Cinematografiche (UNITC)—Group heading all technical sectors on local industry, divided into separate organizations, including film studios, labs, dubbing studios, and auxiliary equipment concerns. Part of ANICA. President: Alberto Genesi.

Unione Nazionale Cinematografie Specializzate (UNCS) — ANICA subdivision including groups covering fields of 16mm production, Educational and Didactic Films, Industrial Films, and Animated Films. President: Giuseppe Tavazza.

Associazione Generale Italiana dello Spettacolo (AGIS)—Overall exhib association covering and dealing with all problems in sector on national and international level. Besides all pic theatres, AGIS also covers legit, tent shows, and other types of theatres.

Associazione Nazionale Esercenti Cinematografici (ANEC)—National pic exhibitors association under AGIS, handling labor and other problems of sector.

Associazione Cattolica Esercenti Cinematografici (ACEC) — Group running Catholic parochial houses on commercial basis.

Associazione Direttori Cineproduzioni (ADC)—Italo Film Producers and production managers dealing for sector in labor and union problems mainly.

Associazione Italiana, Cineoperatori (AIC) — Film Cameramen with labor and union functions.

Associazione Nazionale Autori Cinematografici (ANAC)—Grouping film "authors": directors, writers, on various problems concerning sector.

Centro Cattolico Cinematografico (CCC)—Catholic Film Office with national and international functions both on theoretical and practical level. Rates features according to Catholic moral code, issues specialized publications, coordinates all Catholic Church activity in film sector.

Sindacato Nazionale Giornalisti Cinematografici (SNGC)—National (and only) pic critics association, which each year awards Silver Ribbons for outstanding film achievements.

Unitalia Film — Organization coordinating and expediting propaganda activity for Italian film industry abroad via publications, "film weeks" and other ventures in public relations sector.

INTERNATIONAL FILM ASSOCIATIONS

B.I.C. Bureau International du Cinema was constituted some years ago to examine and coordinate common problems relating to film industry on a world-wide basis. B.I.C. is made up of the following member associations:

FIAPF (International Federation of Film Producers Associations);
FIAD (Int'l Federation of Film Distributors Associations);
CITC (Int'l Confederation of Technical Industries);
UIEC (Int'l Union of Film Exhibitor Associations).

Chairman of B.I.C. since its formation: Eitel Monaco.

Working committee repping each organization within B.I.C., Dr. Brisson for FIAPF, Dr. Schwaller for FIAD, M. Trichet for UIEC, M. Weil-Lorac for CITC.

B.I.C. secretariat, with Achille Valignani and Enrico Giannelli in charge of Secretariat General, is located permanently in Rome's ANICA offices. Among principal objects of current B.I.C. activity is de-taxation of various film industries and bettering of tv vs. pic relations.

WELL-LOVED WESTERNS

They're Tops In Italy Despite The Sweet Life There

Rome.

The Western is the all-round average ideal pic for Italo audiences, according to a poll of over 3,000 exhibs in this country conducted by a local pic company, D.I.C.

Genre won with a 76.8% average against its closest contender, the Adventure film, which copped 67.6%. Other popular kinds, in order, were the Historical, the Biblical, the Comedy, etc. while social, survey, and documentary features proved least popular in theatreowner estimations.

Poll has also been graded on regional basis. With due exceptions, the Western was more popular in the North than South of this country, where Biblicals and Historicals rate first.

Generally, however, response from various regions was remarkably uniform.

Italy In Quest of an Encore

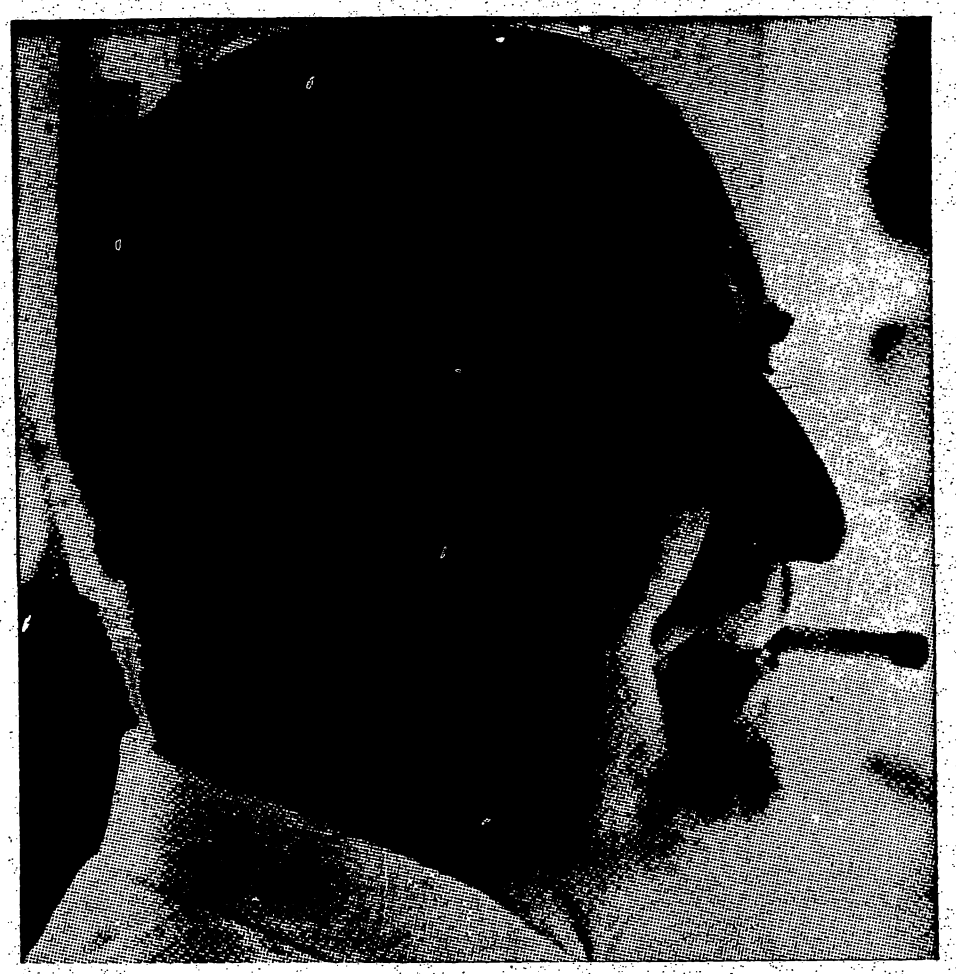
which had a successful 1963-64 program and expects to follow up in kind, plus several others.

Along more general lines, what the industry wants is a more fluid tax rebate system, designed to speed coin expended by the producer back into his coffers faster than the current average wait of three years. As an alternate, industry spokesmen have strongly suggested that the ultimate ideal would be abolition of the aid legislation in exchange for total de-taxation on pic admissions, which most point to as one of industry's major burdens and obstacles. The industry also desires a stable and strong source of finance, above and beyond private sources. It is assumed that the Banca del Lavoro, which currently absolves this function, will soon once more provide the coin for Italo-based pix, but the problem of depletion of the special BNL fund for this film finance will first have to be resolved. A move is now under way to raise the working capital, while it's expected that a second move will include an appeal—perhaps aimed at foreign companies operating here — to resume "loans" in one form or another to the bank in lieu of the "dubbing certificate" loans abolished some years ago and coin from which made up bulk of the BNL fund.



Question of State operation of one or more Italian pic industry facets has been hotly debated because of the political tint which, thanks to Italy's currently confused political situation, such suggestions and pressures have assumed. The left, now that the Socialists have a share in the Government majority, would like more direct state control in various industry branches: production, studios, labs, and exhibition. They claim that this will "protect" the Italian film against foreign incursions and guarantee Italian talent and workers a better shake. Their opponents counter that apart from the political dangers of the situation most previous experiments at government interference and/or control have been financial disasters, and that renewed massive government intervention would only lead to further deficits, and would in the long run only satisfy those aiming at high posts in government-operated industry organizations.

The future is currently being discussed, and the final decisions will inevitably be filled with compromises. The extent of and formulation of these, plus the sagacity of measures taken to overcome the current impasse, will determine whether the Italian film will continue to flourish as it has in the recent years of its extraordinary postwar renaissance, or will return to a more routine existence which would constitute a betrayal to the many vital talents at work here now.

While the studio situation — currently in full evolution—is detailed elsewhere, Italo producers are moving ahead with projects geared to changing tastes of a public which, in the past year, has proved remarkably faithful to the pic medium. Italian attendance has dropped less than in other areas while b.o. totals have actually grown. Thanks to a number of blockbusters, the Yank pic has dominated the local b.o. picture, while the Italian film has dominated the rest of the field.

As in other areas, it's the "big" picture which has made the biggest grabs, while the so-so also-ran has suffered the most. Italian audiences have remained faithful to the Western (sending "How the West Was Won" off to record totals), has acquired a new taste for the episode film (notably "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow"), while a small number of key Italo stars have helped raise medium-budgeted local items into the top figures. Some of these pix, primarily designed for the local market, have also become hits abroad, for an added bonus. The 1963 trend for "Sexy" exploitation items is on the wane, both because of public apathy and official censure, if not censorship.

As noted, therefore, the current industry "difficulty" is purely economic, which does not mean its importance and danger is to be underestimated. Many companies have been hurt, many major and minor producers here—some of them seasoned vets—have had to close up shop if not go into receivership. Others have been been forced to temper their enthusiasms and bide their time with less risky ventures. But many others, producers, directors, writers are currently chafing at the bit, eager for things to clear up fast so that the many projects ready and waiting can — when money begins to flow more freely once more—bring the Italian pic industry back to "normality" once again: the vital, aggressive, trend-setting film - creating normality which has made such a lasting impression on the entertainment picture of the postwar years.

MIFED

international film, TVfilm and documentary market

a new outstanding success of the Milan Trade Fair

In 1960 the International Film, TVfilm and Documentary Market was launched in Milan. Since then, Italy's Lombard metropolis may be said to have become a world centre for dealing in the products of the film industry. This claim might seem exaggerated were it not for a series of facts and figures that speak for the decisive importance of this film-marketing enterprise.

• Opened to coincide with the thirty-eighth Milan Fair of 1960, MIFED has been accommodated from the start in highly suitable offices at the centre of the Fair zone. Here, under its own direction, it has developed an independent organization whose main annual events are held in April and October.

Participants in MIFED obtain special facilities, one of the most important being an Italian Government permit to accord off-quota treatment for films sent to the organization from the United States, Great Britain, West Germany, France, Russia, Spain, Austria, Mexico, Argentine and Yugoslavia. The names of these countries is indication enough of the wide reputation that MIFED has earned among all producer countries concerned with the marketing of films.

At the time of its inauguration MIFED was already provided with highly impressive headquarters. But in order to give patrons the best possible reception at its twice-yearly Cine-Meetings widescale improvements have recently been effected. The premises now extend to a total area of over 30,000 square feet and include ten large and small salons equipped with up-to-date cine-projectors for showing 70, 35 and 16 mm films. There is also a series of well-appointed conference and discussion rooms fitted with interpreters' equipment and duplicate electrical installations. Technical facilities are of the highest standard, and it is true to say that MIFED's highly functional rooms and offices form a unit unmatched anywhere in the world today.

Some idea of the transactional side of the International Film, TVfilm and Documentary Market's activities may be obtained from figures reported at last year's Cine-Meetings when all previous records were broken. The April and October sessions drew 940 business visitors, of whom 306 were producers and exhibitors and 634 were buyers and renters. Films registered with MIFED during this period numbered 2382.

The Cine-Meeting of October 14 - 24, 1963 was the eighth of the series. During those days 355 films were viewed in MIFED's salons, giving a total of 259 hours showing. Another striking fact about the 1963 sessions was their international character. Records show that business visitors from fifty countries in all parts of the world were present.

• It will be readily understood that such widespread interest resulted in a high volume of import-export deals made on a private basis. In common with the 1961 Cine-Meetings, when the presence of the Japanese film industry yielded excellent results both in trading and co-production agreements, last year's sessions also favoured agreements for the exchange of films between different countries.

MIFED has been in existence for little more than four years, but during this short period its successful growth has been crowned, and perhaps brought to completion, by an event long-awaited by the important manufacturing group, Italian and foreign, that supplies the cinema and television industries with apparatus, instruments, tools and accessories of all kinds. SINT-MIFED, the «International Salon of Technical Aids for the Cine, TV and Associated Industries», has been set up.

SINT-MIFED is the organization which, every October, will provide the means and venue for direct contact between manufacturers and those who use their products in all activities connected with picture-making for the Cinema and Television.

Further use was made of MIFED's services when the first TVfilm Show and Market was held on its premises in late October 1963. Organized by the European Radiodiffusion Union (UER), this Show has as its object the sale and exchange of programmes produced by member bodies of the UER.

Viewing sessions, held by permission of MIFED at the Milan Fair headquarters, lasted from October 28 to November 1st. During those days over 200 films were shown, covering the following branches of television production: opera, drama, musical variety, and cultural, scientific and documentary works.

This UER «trade show», which enabled fifty delegates from eighteen European television groups belonging to UER to contact one another, fully demonstrated the need for TVfilm sessions of this kind and the efficacy of such shows.

MIFED's ninth and most recent Cine-Meeting, held from April 15 - 25 last, has further strengthened its record of success. In addition to the familiar faces, some from far-distant countries, the representatives of the American film industry were present in good number. Leading U.S. producer and distribution companies were represented; independent producers and film importers from America were also there.

In the present phase of the cinema industry this widespread interest in MIFED's ninth Cine-Meeting is of special value and significance. While acting as a tonic to the entire trade, it justifies our belief that the vital forces of the cinema world are recognizing the increasing urgency of taking part in Milan's International Film, TVfilm and Documentary Market.

The above-mentioned activities have firmly established the International Film, TVfilm and Documentary Market as a centre for all commercial transactions to do with the film industry. In the opinion of Italian and foreign businessmen interested in this sector it is now an indispensable one.

Meanwhile MIFED continues to strengthen its purely commercial aspect, as distinct from the artistic side which does not concern it. And it can be fairly claimed that it affords an ideal setting for any meeting or convention touching social, scientific or technical matters connected with the film industry.

Venice Fest To Fit The Times

Thorold Dickinson (Great Britain), Ove Brusendorff (Denmark), Ricardo Munoz Suay (Spain), Jerzy Toeplitz (Poland), Georges Sadoul (France), and the Italian president, Mario Soldati, writer and director, are all men of recognized capacity and competence in the field of motion pictures, either by study or actual experience, and belong to seven different countries including Italy which, in contrast to previous years, when the local members were three, will this year have a single representative.

With regard to the list of prizes this jury will have at its disposal, we have given them the possibility of crowning a larger number of films; in this way we hope to meet and overcome the frequent problem encountered by the jury in having to choose between films in certain aspects of almost equal stature and merit (a problem I hope will again present itself this year). The prizes will therefore be the following: the Gold Lion of St. Mark for the best film, the two Volpi Trophies for the best performances, male and female, one or exceptionally two Special Jury Prizes for films which stand out for special values, and a prize to the Best First Film. In widening the number of prizes we have, however, abolished the so-called ex-sequo prizes, which generally satisfied neither of winners.

With regard to participation to the competition, we have confirmed the right of designation (through national organizations) by countries having an annual production total of 70 or more features of "international" scope. Besides these films, others from countries of minor film production can be entered in competition by a festival invitation. We will select the best.

There is no true and proper limitation to the number of films to be shown in competition, though its been generally so that world film production rarely gives more than 15 features of the stature required by Venice participation. But should we have a "fat" year and enjoy the embarrassment of choice, there is nothing to prevent this number from becoming 20, or even 22 . . . Another innovation this year is that the first film efforts" will no longer be relegated to a special section, but will compete with others for all prizes.

In the section reserved for non-competing films, the Festival direction, assisted by its committee of experts, will accept certain films which their producers wish to have shown out of the running, as well as certain other films of value already screened at other film events of the year that may fit the festival's programming needs. We have thought, this year, to substitute a helter-skelter selection in this sector with a more pondered grouping of non-competing films by theme or tendency, or by inviting a series of films from minor producing countries but which mirror the spirit of their country or typical problems of those areas.

With regard to this 25th edition of the Mostra it is certainly too early to make any predictions. However, by following—as we are currently doing—with profound attention the productions currently in work or about to start (and which would be completed by July), we have noted that while some countries have slowed down their production rhythm, there has been a notable renaissance in the U.S.A., both on the part of the majors as by the independent companies.

Metro, 20th-Fox, UA, Columbia, and the others have already announced elaborate plans for the current season, and among the titles that come to mind are some that could be taken into consideration for our selection, such as Richard Brooks' "Lord Jim," Alfred Hitchcock's "Marnie," John Ford's "Cheyenne Autumn," John Frankenheimer's "The Confessor," Billy Wilder's "The Dazzling Hour," the spectacular "My Fair Lady," and others.

In Britain and France production has dropped this year, but we feel it should not be too difficult to find one or two films of quality worthy of representing those countries. The Festival direction is already in touch with the American selection group, once again headed by Fred Zinnemann, which is charged with the choice of official U.S. participation at film festivals.

Italy, Japan should have a couple of good films at least, while we are hoping for a discovery or two from Scandinavia and the Asiatic areas. We are also closely following production in the U.S.S.R., in Poland, in Czechoslovakia, in Jugoslavia, though it's still to early to name titles. We know, however, that some of the top directors in these countries are at work.

To sum up, and without wanting to appear over-optimistic after a first general look around, I think we can hope for a roster of artistic and spectacular interest, varied and significant.

More, Better Rome Studios

scene were provided in the past few months by the financial troubles of Titanus Films, which until recently held three Studios and a number of dubbing plants. Of these, Titanus Farnesina, the largest, is inoperative and most likely will go to real estate, as it's in a high rental area. Titanus Tuscolana reverts to its previous status (it was on rental basis) as pertaining to Rome's Experimental Film School. Titanus Appia, also known as Scalera, is still being rented out by Titanus, and keeps busy.

The onetime Safa-Palatino Studios on the Palatine Hill have recently been taken over by Angelo Rizzoli, who is currently refurbishing and expanding, within the limits of the areas small confines. Another switch is A.T.C.'s, which has dropped its previous setup and moved to Grottaferrata, taking over the Inter Film Grottaferrata setup in that peripheral area in conjunction with the equipment company which is indirectly linked with Sancro Films, a Rome production firm.

Ellos Film Studios is a compact new setup with two stages which has recently built a western street close to its two sound stages. De-Paolis Studios, on Via Tiburtina, is perhaps the Roman studio which has been busiest throughout the past year, perhaps because of savvy price policy and low overheads. Many medium-budgeters and spectacles were shot there during the past year.

Getting back to Rome's studio neophytes, INCOM is a most compact and eminently functional complex, whose boast is that every vital facet is within shouting distance of the other—hence rapid interchangeability in sets, equipment, and personnel. It has the latest in lighting facilities, set transport, etc. plus own labs for true full cycle operation.

The Dino DeLaurentiis Center (which some have already dubbed "Dinoland") is a vaster, massive complex, geared to mass operation if necessary, and equally outfitted with the latest equipment and functional facets. If not the all-round largest, it claims the tallest sound stages in the world. Office space range of accessory buildings and independent power plants are other boasts, not least of which—shared with INCOM—is complete soundproof-ness of the stages, something which visiting sound technicians with so-so experiences of their Rome previous stays will appreciate.

Because of the uncertainties mentioned above, the local studio situation is still not completely stabilized. Things should become clearer in the course of this year.

The principal trend, then, is towards functionality, up-to-dateness, and the consequent cutting down of overheads. Predictably, TV is well in the thoughts of anyone building — or rebuilding — studios here: both INCOM and DeLaurentiis' complexes have been designed to be specifically usable by either medium.

Outside of Rome, there is Tirrenia Studios, near Pisa which has accommodated a number of films during the past year, and which will probably be used for a series of telepix during coming months. Television and advertising films are the principal activity of the Milan and Turin Studios ing up as a four-parter; Vittorio Gassmann is penned in, among others, for "L' Amazzadonne"; on an international scale, there are the already finished "Worlds Greatest Swindles" and the upcoming Sancro 3-part production, "Bettgeschichten," comprising an Italian, French, and German segment.

And Carlo Ponti, undismayed by report that comedian Toto is planning to spoof the genre with "Toto Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow," has already registered a sequel: "Today, Tomorrow, and the Day After."

Report on Soviet Film Industry: All There on Fixed Annual Wage But With Escalator and Bonus

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

Los Angeles, April 21.

Society of Motion Picture & Television Engineers, which normally confines its convention agenda pretty much to technical developments, et al, expanded its interest at last week's 95th semi-annual conclave held at Ambassador Hotel here and devoted an entire evening session to the subject of the Russian motion picture industry.

Soviet report was the aftermath of three-week tour of Russian motion picture and television facilities last October-November by a trio of SMPTE members and producer-director Frank Capra. Trek was part of the cultural exchange program established by the U.S. State Dept. and the U.S.S.R., which was launched with visit of three Russians, hosted by the SMPTE at request of State Dept. Technicians making trip included Dr. Deane R. White of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Ethan M. Stifle of Eastman Kodak Co., and William E. Gephart Jr., of General Film Laboratories. Paper was delivered by first two members, Gephart being bedded with a broken leg.

Improving

The Russian film industry, it was reported, is on the upward march both in technical program and output. Conclusion of the four-man delegation was that although much of the equipment and processes seen were quite similar to those in the U.S., some of the equipment showed interesting independent design features.

Party visited 18 sites in five cities: Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, Odessa and Alma-Ata, where they studied studios, theatres, film processing labs, a motion picture design bureau and a research center.

Strong organization is behind the Soviet motion picture industry, they found. Art committees approve or disapprove all scripts and ideas for features, and follow through during the filming of an equipment factory, a tv station, a picture, which must be reviewed by an appropriate State committee before it is allowed a release.

Salaries

All artists and technicians are paid a yearly salary, for life, subject, of course, to good conduct, which after years hits a high of $12,000. Occasional bonuses may boost this figure another $8,000.

New workers coming into the industry are trained in two schools, in Leningrad for operators and technologists, in Moscow for "creative" workers. Courses for writers, directors and cameramen is five and one-half years; for all others, four and one-half years.

Four studios account for approximately 50% of all feature production, which in 1963 was estimated at about 120 pix—about 40% in color—but is expected to rise to 150 yearly in the near future. These are located in Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev and Alma-Ata. Mosfilm, in Moscow, largest studio in Russia, turns out 30% of all product. Five stages are used here with two more under construction.

Studio For Kiev

There is a development under way, it was reported, to build a new studio in Kiev for production of educational and popular science films.

Probably the most popular camera used is the Druzhba 35m camera, but another, the Rodina, is also in considerable use. Pix of 70m are filmed in a camera of Russian design, but this includes stock of this same size, as contrasted to the U.S. practice of using negative stock of 65m.

In sound recording, Russians favor four types: original recording with magnetic tracks, and four-, six- and nine-channel stereophonic records. The four-channel system is normally employed with 35m anamorphic system; the six-channel with wide-format pix. The

HUNGARY'S 1964 FILMS

Budapest.

Herewith are the 17 feature films scheduled for production in the Hungarian studios during the present year. At least one of these has only a working title. One film, "The Golden Head" is a co-production with American interests, directed by Richard Thorpe. Western film observers may be struck by the title, "What's The Trouble With Hungarian Films?", which has a certain kinship in self-awareness with Fellini's "8½" of Italy.

"SMASH-UP"

Screenplay: Judit Mariassy
Director: Felix Mariassy

Terpinko, the weight-lifter is considered to be a lucky guy. People speak nearly with awe about his force, his uninhibitedness, his bravado. But suddenly his usually successful methods fail and his whole life proves a fiasco: Eva, the wife of an engineer — who herself is working in a research institute—resists his courting. He nearly causes the death of the young woman when at last he realizes that no one may live in our society without honest humaneness.

"SUCCESS"

Screenplay: Andras Kovacs
Director: Andras Kovacs

A film of sociographical character, made with methods of the "cinema verite" of France. It plays in the milieu of technical intellectuals and examines the reaction of people to the conditions which have developed.

"THE WOMEN OF SZELISTYE"

(working title)

Screenplay: Miklos Hubay. Based upon a short story by Kalman Mikszath, the famous Hungarian writer.
Director: Karoly Makk
A Cinemascope color film.

A renaissance comedy, playing in the 15th century, in the court of King Matyas.

Screenplay: Lajos Galambos
Director: Felix Mariassy

The story of a young schoolmistress who is fighting, in a little village, for the building of a new school, as the old one has grown to the symbol of spiritual and social backwardness.

"FOUR GIRLS IN THE COURT-YARD"

Screenplay: Balazs Sipkay and Jozsef Solymar
Director: Pal Zolnay

Four young school-mistresses are living at a small village. They are very lonely. The film relates their life—touching love stories and disillusions.

"YES"

Screenplay: Ivan Boldizsar
Director: Gyorgy Revesz

Engineer Janos Kiss lives a critical period of his life. His wife was taken to hospital with premature birth and he, at home, is packing his belongings: he wants to leave her, he does not want to accept the child. For him this means a "tight corner" and he cannot be "cornered." In his thoughts he debates with the members of his family, the important personages of his life, he argues against the child which is born. Suffering, he seeks in his past for the moment, when he has spoiled his life. The revived past outlines the life of a coward who, at that certain time, said neither "yes," nor "no." In this decisive moment of his life he has to realize that he lived in untruth, that his arguments are false and that there is only one possibility left to him: the child which is born. Conscious of this fact he returns to the clinics and waits for the child, the reply to the problems of his life.

"THE MONEYMAKER"

Screenplay: Imre Bencsik. Based upon a novel by Lajos Tolnai
Director: Frigyes Ban

The film is a satirical portrayal of gentry-Hungary at the turn of the century. It relates the career of a city-clerk who forged money.

"THE AGE OF DAYDREAMING"

Written and directed by Istvan Szabo

It is the story of a young man who realizes his dreams and plans after hard fights. Inbetween he grows up and his dreams and plans have changed, too.

"WIDOWED BRIDES"

Screenplay: Anna Borhy and Sandor Kovacs
Director: Viktor Gertler

A forsaken taxi is found in a Budapest suburb. The driver has disappeared. Police investigation begins. Upon notice published in the papers six "fiancees" of the disappeared man show up. Is he a marriage swindler? Police suspect murder and seek the murderers among the six women. But the driver reappears and we come to know why he wanted to marry all the six women.

"TESTIMONY"

Screenplay: Lajos Mesterhazy and Zsuzsa Biro
Director: Marton Keleti

In its essence the film plays today, but the last months of 1944 play an important role in it. A young student living from one day to the other enquires first by chance then with more and more interest about the circumstances of the death of his father who, as a private, died in action at the end of 1944. The recognition of the dead father's unknown life, of the reasons and causes of his death transform the boy into a conscious man of grown-up mentality.

"THE GOLDEN HEAD"

Screenplay: Roger Pilkington—Ivan Boldizsar
Director: Richard Thorpe

An American-Hungarian co-production. A Cinemascope color film.

British teenagers pass every year their summer holidays by navigating on their small boat upon various rivers of Europe. This year they come to Hungary and it means a special sensation to them to come "behind the Iron Curtain." Here they come to know, however, the everyday life of a peaceful people. But their holidays are not lacking adventure either. A beautiful medieval treasure, the golden head of Saint Laszlo was stolen from a cathedral. The children succeed in tracing the criminals and return from their holidays with the pleasant feeling of well spent time.

"THOSE TIMES ARE PAST"

Screenplay: Istvan Kallai
Director: Endre Marton

Chance brings that on the occasion of an official trip to the province a man—and a woman-employee get entangled into a love adventure. As they happen to discover a corruption, the man accused for same denounces them because of their love-affair. Scandal breaks loose at the office. Everybody forgets about the corruption and only cares for the love-affair, claiming under the motto "those times are past" that those two should divorce their wife, respectively husband and get married. Petit-bourgeois mentality has created a new schematism in substitution of old time marriage moral principles.

"WHAT'S THE TROUBLE WITH HUNGARIAN FILMS?"

Screenplay: Istvan Csurka
Director: Tamas Fejer

In this satirical comedy a film director and a screenplay-writer, wanting to hide their own inability, transform in the course of the usual film-studio procedures, a quite thrillingly beginning tragedy first into a comedy and then into a show.

"THIS IS HOW I CAME"

Screenplay: I. Vadasz—I. Hernadi
Director: Miklos Jancso

In the last days of the war, the liberating Soviet troops meet a peasant lad, escaping from military service forced upon him. They become friends and get acquainted with the life of each other. A Soviet soldier dies in action and the Hungarian man tries in vain to save his new friend's life, seeking desperately for a physician. Putting the red star of the dead soldier upon his own cap, he sets out to find work and new life.

"THE GIRL DANCED TO LIFE"

Written and directed by Tamas Banovich

A spectacular dance-film in color which has a highly exigent message. It shows the social situation of the woman in three various periods of history.

"THE SONS OF THE HEARTLESS MAN"

Screenplay: Janos Erdody. Based upon the famous romantic novel by Mer Jokai
Director: Zoltan Varkonyi

A Cinemascope color-film (in two parts). The story plays in the period of the Hungarian War for Independence in 1948 and focusses upon the story of the Baradlay family. In spite of innumerable manifestations of personal heroism the fight for liberty is defeated. Upon his death bed the father warns his sons to serve faithfully the Habsburg dynasty, but—in spite of this last will—the mother encourages her three sons to fight for liberty. General Haynau orders bloody vengeance. The youngest Baradlay boy—who did not participate in the fight—reports in place of his brother, who has a family, and dies in order to save him.

"10,000 DAYS"

Screesplay: Imre Gyongyossy
Director: Ferenc Kosa

Poland Producing 30 Features Yearly; Many Story Styles Include Comedy

By ZBIGNIEW PITERA

Warsaw.

Last year provided the film industry of Poland with a number of encouraging successes. First the San Francisco Film Festival Grand Prix went to "How To Be Loved" by Wojciech Has. Then "The Knife In the Water" attracted attention at the New York Festival held in Philharmonic Hall. This Roman Polanski feature was the object of considerable attention in the American press and is currently in American playoff.

These last recent years have conferred prestige on the "Polish school of film." Our film producers and writers have their own characteristic signature on their work. One mentions a historical fresco, "The Knights of the Teutonic Order" by Aleksander Ford and a comedy, "Eva Wants to Sleep" by Tadeusz Chmielewski. Both raised lively interest with foreign audiences.

From Ground Up

There was an almost instanteous revival of Polish film production after the war in spite of a total devastation of its technical facilities (studios, etc.). Subsidized by the Government, which took over the management of nearly all branches of the film industry, new studios and cutting-rooms were built. Factories to manufacture studio and screen equipment were founded in an extremely short time. Polish film-makers were not only quick but also efficient in making use of the new equipment and facilities as proved by the first international successes of Polish Cinema brought about by films; "The Last Stage" by Wanda Jakubowska and "Border Street" by Aleksander Ford, made as early as the first post-war years.

A second spurt came in 1956. Taking advantage of the experience acquired during the first post-war decade and analysing in detail all successes and failures of Polish films in those years, the industry was able to build a new model of film production so far not known in other countries and best suited both to our economic resources and artistic ambitions and to the specific exigencies and aspects of film-art.

This new model not only eliminates the differences apparent in other film industries caused by the discrepancy between the artistic shape of a film and its economic implications, but also blends smoothly the interests of the producer (i.e. the Government), film-makers and audiences, and puts strong emphasis on the artistic level of film production. We are all aware that these often contradictory interests have for years been causing insoluble problems to World Cinema which seems to be caught in a vicious circle.

We have tried to solve them in Poland in the following way:

The Government: Which may be regarded as patron of the Polish Cinema, and although this patron supervises film production, it gives a free hand to film-makers in choosing the subjects and in moulding the artistic shape of their films. Where feature films are concerned this scheme is carried out by eight autonomous film units which consist of script-writers, directors and cameramen who work on similar lines and who have a similar approach to film subjects, mode of expression and creative methods.

The film studios: There are three of them at present, namely the Lodz, Wroclaw and Warsaw studios, and facilities of the film industry (shooting halls, equipment, cutting-rooms, etc.) are used by all the units in turn and serve them as their workshops. The units are supervised by Artistic Managers, most of them prominent Polish film directors, Aleksander Ford, Jerzy Kawalerowicz, Jerzy Bossak, and others.

What results were brought about by this system of film production?

Unit System Clicks

The system of units became a turning point by increasing the number of films produced and by developing their artistic standard. The annual production has been doubled and amounts to 30 features per year. We believe they flourish in ideas and are marked by a variety of styles. The unit system has given opportunities to the youngest directors—graduates of the State Drama and Film School, believed one of the best of its kind in the world. Last but not least, it has brought about a decrease of the cost of film production.

Steady development of the quality of our films can best be proved by "Kanal," "Ashes and Diamonds," "Innocent Sorcerers" and "Samson" by Andrzej Wajda, who is at present making "The Ashes," a historical epic of the period of the Napoleonic wars. "The Shadow," "It is Not The End Yet," "Night Train" and "Mother Joan of the Angels" by Jerzy Kawalerowicz may be cited. Latter is preparing a classic novel by Boleslaw Prus, "The Pharaoh," set against the background of ancient Egypt, but revealing some moral problems which have lost none of their applicability to human nature.

Wojciech Has who is at his best at psychological dramas ("The Noose," "Farewells," "Golden Dreams" and "How to be Loved") has for once given up his favorite genre and is at present working on a screen adaptation of a colorful, romantic adventure story in period settings.

The recent release of an unfinished film by the late Andrzej Munk ("The Man on the Track," "Eroica" and "Bad Luck") has become an outstanding event both for cinema people and for wide audiences. Munk's attitude towards the problem raised by the film was quite unconventional. The dramatic story develops almost simultaneously on two levels which mark two different periods: thus contemporary scenes are interwoven with those of a Nazi concentration camp.

In comedies we should note a new click of Tadeusz Chmielewski, director of "Eva Wants to Sleep" (awarded the Grand Prix at San Sebastian Festival), who has just recently presented his fast moving war-comedy, "Where is the General?"

Tadeusz Konwicki, Aleksander Scibor-Rylski and Jerzy Stawinski, the pioneers of so called "author film" in Poland, have made the following films based entirely on their own screenplays, "Halloween," "Their Everyday Life" and "No More Divorces," respectively.

Last but not least, talented documentalists, Jerzy Hoffman and Edward Skorzewski, Jan Lomnicki all of them winners of various prizes at short film festivals, made successful feature debuts with a comedy, "Gangsters and Philanthropists" and a rural drama, "The Dowry," respectively.

Warsaw Animators

Warsaw.

Of the three Polish studios which produce animated films, two specialize in series. First series, made for the 1962-63 season, is a 13-chapter fantasy called "Jack." This series has been sold to 26 countries, including Great Britain, which showed it on the BBC Children's Program last year.

Other series, currently in production, are all in color, without dialogue and designed for showing in black and white. Directors, mostly graduates of the Academy of Fine Arts, are also the authors of the cartoon and puppet designs and background. Among series on which work is presently being done are "On Trail," comedy detective plot; "The Knight of Red Hearts," which brings playing cards to life; "Boo and Loo," slapstick gags, and "Blue Beetle" which is fantasy with insects as principal characters.

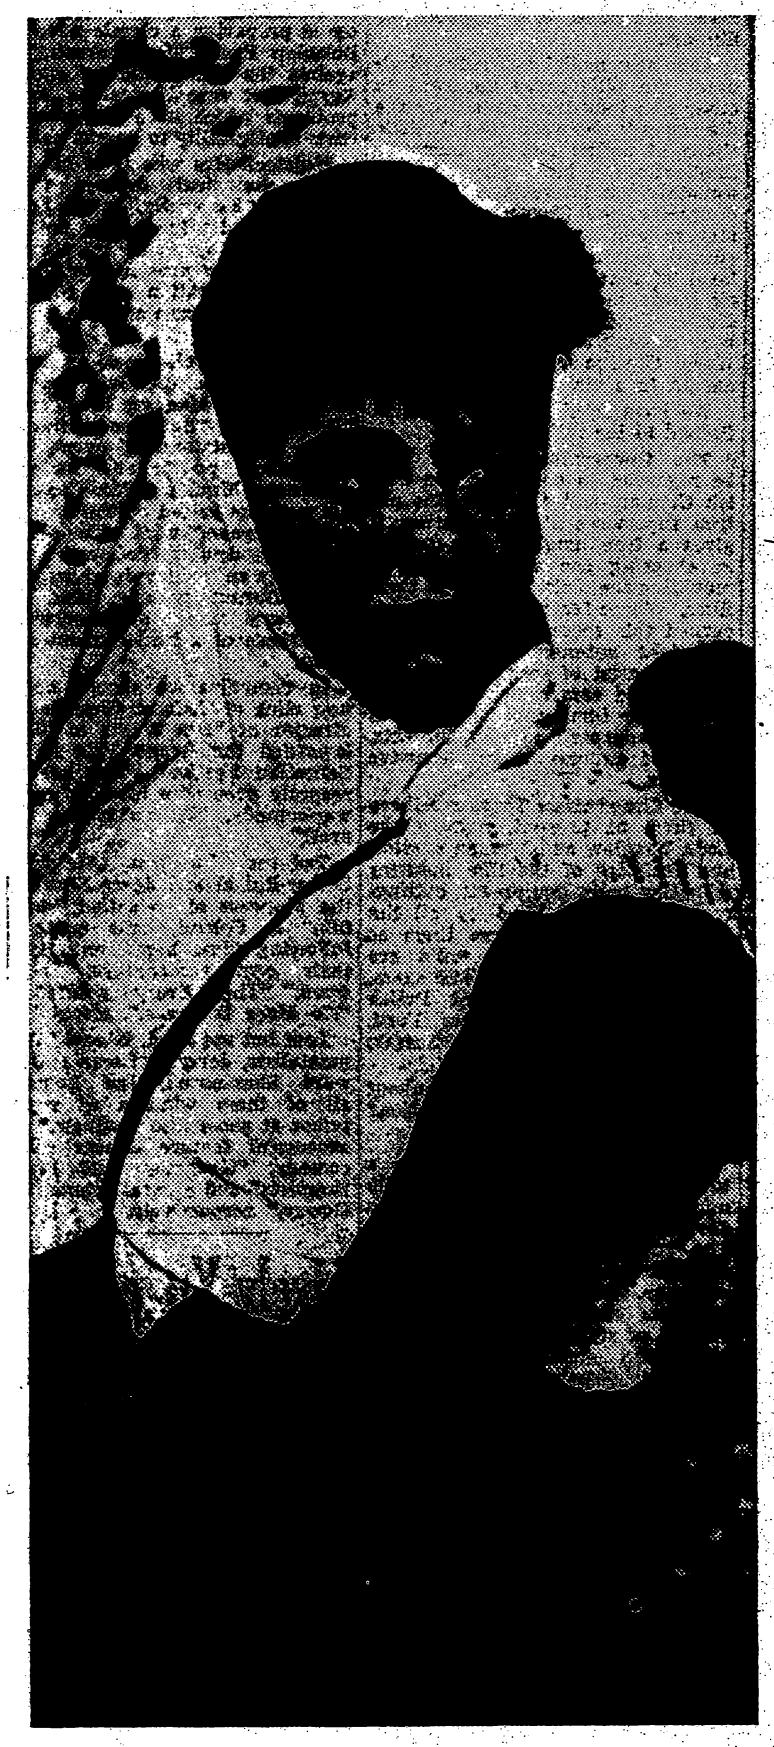
Lively Yugoslav Film Industry

By STOJAN BRALOVIC

Belgrade.

In the period between the two world wars, the film industry of Yugoslavia amounted to not much. Production represented groping first efforts, little for export. The present vigorous film industry dates from 1947 with the completion of new studios. Since then Yugoslavian features to the number of 188 have been created. Also, of course, there has been an increasing amount of co-production with the industries and private producers of other lands.

At the outset Yugoslavia's own film stories were obsessed with the war against the Germans, much as was the film industry of Russia. This has faded with time. More varied subject-matter is now handled although patriotic themes continue as with "Kozara," of recent vintage. It details a German air raid, also a German scheme to capture Marshal, now President, Tito. Soundtracking in French, Russian and English are proposed in addition to the native Serbian.



Alien product imported here during passed three to four months included these titles: "Jules et Jim," French film, "Guns of Navarone," USA, "The Man's Destiny," USSR production.

Yugoslav films doing best box-office this spring are:

"Kozara," "Sasha," "The Valley of Peace."

INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL

XIV.

KARLOVY VARY

4.–19. 7. 1964

The purpose of the Festival is to draw attention to outstanding films which, by their artistic form and content, in the spirit of the Festival motto, contribute to the development of cinematography.

Part of the Festival is the Free Tribune which provides an opportunity for film makers, theoreticians, journalists and producers freely to confront their views and thereby attain mutual understanding and a better grasp of the aims of cinematographic art in the present time.

During the Festival, the IInd Symposium of the young and new cinematographies of Africa, Asia and Latin America will be held; its purpose is, on the one hand, to show in a special Symposium competition films which contribute to the development of the young and new cinematographies of these regions, on the other hand to draw attention to films which are marked by specific national or local traits in the countries of the above-named regions, regardless of the age of the cinematographies in these individual countries.

Part of the Symposium are round-table discussions which offer an opportunity to representatives from Africa, Asia and Latin America to deliberate on problems connected with the development of the cinematographies in these countries, and to creators of films, theoreticians and journalists from other countries to become acquainted with the problems confronting the cinematographies of the above-named countries and to take part in their solution.

The competition of the Symposium and the round-table discussions strengthen the connection between the cinematographies of the countries mentioned and the development of cinematography the world over.

Polish Animated Cartoon Series for Cinema and TV Release

Three studios in Poland produce animated films, two of them specialize in series. The first series, "JACK THE SLEEPY HEAD", was made in 1962/63: thirteen fantastic adventures of little Jack in the world of his dreams.

Action, a simple musical background, and pleasant cartoon characters quickly made it a success. The first showings appeared on the BBC Children's Programme in 1963. "JACK" is now shown in thirteen countries and has been sold to thirteen others.

Meanwhile, Polish studios have produced further series films. "ON TRAIL" features the exciting and humorous experiences of a little detective. "THE KNIGHT OF RED HEARTS" shows a personified pack of cards fighting battles against the evil kings. "BOO AND LOO" is a slapstick-gag series describing the life of two little scamps.

"BLUE BEETLE" has a plot set in the miraculous world of the bee-princess and the romantic crickets.

All these series films are in colour, without dialogue and are adapted for showing in black and white.

In Polish studios the directors are also the authors of the cartoon and puppet designs and backgrounds. They are mostly graduates of the Academy of Fine Arts.

Subjects from all the above series will be presented at the IVth Cracow Short Film Festival in June 1964.

Yanks Returning To Rome

Novak and Marcello Mastroianni have been paired, at least in prelim announcements; Martin Poll is likewise slated to produce for 20th here, project to be called "The Appointment," from a Paul Osborn script, with summer start bruited.

Coproduction Set

Then there's the partly-Yank set of pix which sees Embassy Pictures linked to Carlo Ponti: the current "Marriage, Italian Style," which moves to Rome after its Naples locations; "Casanova 70," "Tropic of Cancer," and other items are likewise on the rumored list for this year. Ponti links forces with Metro, on the other hand, on three: "Operation Crossbow," slated for a summer start; Peter Ustinov's "Lady L," which could go before the end of the year; and "Doctor Zhivago," which looks more likely as a 1965 starter under David Lean's direction.

The remaining field of potential local starters is at least at present more nebulous, and in some cases derives principally from news bits culled in trades on both sides of the Atlantic.

Paramount, one source informs, intends to shoot "The Greatest Job in the World" here; Sol Fielding is to produce for Columbia an item set here and titled "This Mine Oath"; Roger Corman also has been toying with a local project; "Illicit" is mentioned as a Claudia Cardinale - Omar Sharif starrer; Hal Chester has announced he'd like to make "Legacy of a Spy" in tandem with Rome's Galatea Films, with Anton Leader directing; Columbia is said interested in coming in with Ottavio Poggi this summer on "Richard the Lion Hearted"; Al Sultrizio has said he's signed no less than Jayne Mansfield for a film to shoot in Italy under the title "Killer at Large"; and last but not least, Joseph L. Mankiewicz has indicated nostalgia for Italy, where he shot "Cleopatra," and hopes to direct "Mr. Fox of Venice" in that city, perhaps late this year, and for UA.

The number of Yank and other foreign stars should also be on the rise once more here as things get back into swing. Notably, there's a current influx of oater specialists, being imported as Italo filmmakers jump on the western bandwagon.

All in all, and if only a portion of the above ideas materialize, things should be looking up soon in a sector of the local industry which has been in the doldrums for some time.

YUGOSLAVIA'S 6 STUDIOS OFTEN RENTED

Belgrade.

Yugoslavia has six film studios which successfully cooperate with foreign foreign film producers, offering them their technical manpower and equipment services. Belgrade, Zagreb, Ljubljana and Sarajevo have one film studio each. Ljubljana studio is very good and suitable for the film producers use in Alpine parts of the country, while the remaining two studios are on the Adriatic coast, in brilliant flora and exotic surroundings.

Studios of Belgrade, Zagreb and Budva are very up-to-date in gear and have expert cadres of workers.

There have been no changes in the conditions for renting the studio space and there are no new government regulations on the prices and hiring conditions. Rentals are under the prices charged for similar services in other foreign countries. But, in Yugoslavia costs depend upon the partnership and the shooting time.

Television Importance Slight; Theatre Screen Tops With Yugo Masses

Belgrade.

Yugoslavia has 1,535 hardtop film theatres for the 35m pix. Add about 150 mobile units projecting 16m gauge. Most of the theatres, especially in the capital and the main towns of the six Federal republics, have gear for showing Cinemascope and VistaVision technique, which are very popular among fans in Yugoslavia. In the whole country there are now about a dozen modern cinemas in construction with latest facilities. Should be completed by 1964.

Yugoslav's television, after over four years of operations, is still "experimental." Hence not much damage on theatres or production. True, admissions somewhat dropped last year in comparison with 1962, but that is more plausibly ascribed to factors within the film trade itself.

Talent Bubbles

yarn a springboard for a big screen rep. And, of course, something must be done to capture the brilliantly talented Vanessa Redgrave. Dedicated though she is to the theatre, she has what it takes for a top screen career, her only problem being an undue lavishment of inches.

If, for awhile, British film producers can think of other matters than turning every male pop singer into a screen idol (forget the Beatles, who are a law unto their remarkable selves) they will also find some useful male talent waiting for the right opportunity. Terence Stamp got his with "Billy Budd" and already is in Hollywood with "The Collector." But Tom Courtenay, painstakingly building up a sound reputation here as a perceptive, young actor, is needing only the right chance to hurtle him into the Albert Finney class.

One performance by Michael Caine in "Zulu" has won this blond young man a swift passport to potential stardom. Colin Campbell, Dudley Sutton and Michael Crawford are others worth noting. Those who complain that since the late Aubrey Smith and Michael Wilding there is only one obvious, upperclass Englishman available for Hollywood films are no doubt watching James Fox with interest. He had his big break as the weak young master in "The Servant," has been named this year by Britain's Variety Club Tent as "the most promising young actor" and has shown that he can "take it" by appearing in a stage musical of short duration over which the critics were more than caustic.

James Booth, sharp, alert, very Cockney and wide-boyish as an actor, and James Villiers, quite the reverse with an aristocratic, languid voice and appearance, should soon hit the tops. And, in a slightly older, more experienced bracket, films have yet to see the best of a very able actor, Ian Bannen, now appearing in "Mr. Moses."

Tell of Soviets

nine-channel is used to meet requirement of other Russian presentations.

Plastics Used

Plastics are widely used instead of stainless steel (as in U.S.) in Russian processing equipment and control, but these seem well chosen and adequate for their function, according to the report. Throughput speeds, while not tabulated, did not seem forced as high as now common in the U.S., speakers stated.

Visitors also found that reduction printing from 35m original to a double row of 16m format images on 32m stock was in common use. Looking to the future, there was some opinion among Soviet filmmakers that the use of 70m for feature films might increase considerably.

In another paper, Sidney P. Solow, veepee-general manager of Republic Corp.'s Consolidated Film Industries, made a plea for a "common sense approach" to photography and a standard process to meet the demands of all screens.

Approximately 45% of all indoor theatres in the U.S., he said, cannot take the full width of the various Scope photographic processes, while a majority of drive-ins have a screen ratio of about 2-to-1 which results in a 15% loss in available picture and light.

To meet this general loss in theatres everywhere, Solow advocated a universal, mildly anamorphic compromise that would display all of the available image area and utilize all the projector illumination. This would allow a ratio of between 2-to-1 and 2.2-to-1.

Big Film Excitement In Hungary: Shooting First Cinerama Feature

Budapest.

It had been intended that Nicolas Reisini would visit Budapest and sign the contract. But he broke his leg. Hence, he invited Istvan Dosai, general manager of Hungarofilm, to the U.S. to sign there. Usually the redtape to obtain a visa for such a trip requires six weeks. It was shortened to four days and Dosai flew out. At stake was the first coproduction between America and Hungary and the first use of Cinerama.

Dosai was as speedy as any American enterpriser. Reisini's fracture was on Sunday. The Hungarian producer left Budapest on Friday and was conferring with the then-president of Cinerama in his N.Y. hospital on Saturday. But the pace did not fail to take the Hungarian's breath. Sick, Reisini was more results-getting than most people with all their limbs intact. Their meetings were devoted to working out agreements on the co-production of "The Golden Head," to be filmed in Hungary.

Says Dosai, "I believe that we proved to be good partners in this appealing style of working and we are pleased by this fact. We have experts, too.

"We Hungarians have always been known as being fond of our guests, of spoiling them."

"We" includes Hungarian producer Istvan Nemeskurty, head of Studio Nr. 4, Budapest, where "The Golden Head" was made. Like Dosai, he is an excellent organizer with the diplomacy needed in film production.

Nemeskurty, asked why he had embarked on this film coproduction, first between a socialist country and the U.S., answered: "So many Western Cinerama films have been produced already in Hollywood — and we wanted the first Eastern film to be realized.

An Act of Faith

"They have entrusted the Cinerama camera, completely unknown to us, to Istban Hildebrand. We liked this display of faith."

Shooting on "The Golden Head" started twice. First was stopped because of misunderstandings. The second started in autumn. As the story takes place in summer, Cinerama wanted Nemeskurty to postpone shooting until spring.

"We didn't want to wait so long," said the producer, "so I guaranteed that weather in Hungary is summerlike until November. Should I confess, now, how anxious I've been that this year it should really be so? And it was—bright sun shone during the entire autumn.

"When I met Cinerama vice president Tom Conroy in London, in February, he didn't believe that we had also had a bitterly cold winter in Hungary. I told him that the weather found pleasure in our successful co-production and wanted to help us by remaining beautiful."

Difficulty caused by difference of languages was solved by use of six interpreters who helped participants in the production. American film people learned in no time that the most important words were "Felvetel!" "Csapo!" and "Allji!"

Ten per cent of the film was shot in London. Nemeskurty speaks with highest praise of dubbing done there. "They are real artists in finding original voice-types for the actors." Asked whether coproduction would continue, he said "We would be pleased if it did."

At Hünnia Filmstudios, through production manager Andras Nemeth, an interview was held with cameraman Hildebrand, Cecilia Esztergalyos, star of "Golden Head" and Nemeth.

"In principle, films are made the same everywhere in the world," said Nemeth, "but in practice there are differences. In Hungary shooting a film is usually preceded by long, thorough preparation. There is no room for improvisation. In order to collaborate with the Americans, we pushed aside nearly all our own traditional methods.

"Each day we had to fight for the next one. This was very useful for we learned another method. The working tempo, the energy and capacity of the Americans, is simply marvellous. Our work was carried on in a fertile tension of nerves."

Exciting Experience

Hildebrand said that, to him, "the camera-technical part was most exciting. Cinerama first used their latest invention, the 'one-lens system' here, which records picture and sound on one strip instead of three used hitherto used, and projects the picture with one projector instead of three. I don't know its secret but loved working with it. The special form determines the picture composition, moves the actor and the camera. A three-times bigger field has to be lit than for ordinary widescreen. All this means many new problems. The enormous enlargement increases the gestures and mimics. The actor is put under a microscope.

"During shooting I heard how complicated was the moving of the equipment. The sound camera alone weighs about 600 pounds, but it is clear that such experimental equipment will greatly influence shooting a film."

Added Hildebrand, "Cinerama is not only a visual sensation, it is a physiological one. Still a young branch of the film industry, I am convinced that it will be tv's only real rival. The spectator is present, he lives in the film. The future belongs to Cinerama. The seven - channel stereosound also creates a sensation of living, of magic."

Acting In English

Cecilia Esztergalyos, former ballet dancer, plays the lead role in "Golden Head." She was chosen as result of performance she gave in a short, "You." In the Cinerama feature she plays a 15-year-old. Her greatest trouble was having to act while speaking English. As the director sometimes made text changes, Miss Eszterglayos didn't have the possibility of memorizing the English words.

The other important cast members are juveniles Jess Conrad, Lorraine Power and Denis Gilmore, and Douglas Wilmer, who plays their father.

Ivan Boldizsar, Hungarian cowriter of the film, suggested that the "Golden Head" be the golden sculpture of St. Laszlo, which is deposited in the Cathedral of Gyor. The Bishop of Gyor asked the film people not to give too much publicity to the art treasure, which is stolen in the film, for fear that someone would really steal it. Boldizsar, a very active writer, said that he did not consider the script "a literary task, but a new venture."

"Through the new genre of Cinerama we wanted to show as much as possible of our country's landscapes and possibilities. Each interpreter is a certain type and it was important that Hunarian types should differ from the operetta style so often used. Our American partners had the same idea but, just the same, some operetta types popped up.

"The Americans were delightful to see that our young Hungarian girls dance the twist as they didn't believe our young people dance such modern dances.

New Studios Pep Up Bulgaria

By ALEXANDER DOUNCHEV

(Administrative Head of The Bulgarian Cinema Industry)

Sofia.

The Bulgarian film actually began its existence only after World War II, with the successful completion of the "antifascist" popular uprising. Some 20 years separate us from that historic event. It is therefore fitting that the current film year will be connected with the celebration of this anniversary.

What are the salient points about Bulgaria's film production in our day? In 1963 we produced nine feature films, one full-length documentary and over 100 short documentary and popular science films. In addition, we turned out 10 cartoon films and 60 weekly newsreels. The year was marked by a milestone: the 1,000th weekly newsreel.

The newly-built film center near Sofia was recently inaugurated. Bulgaria's producers will now have improved artistic facilities to stimulate creative solutions. This film center has an annual production capacity of 14 or 15 films. Spacious studios and up-to-date equipment should permit us also to rent studio space to producers of other countries. At present orders from West Germany are being carried out, while negotiations are on foot with Poland, Austria and the East Germany. It is also contemplated that the new film base makes it possible to contract for co-productions with any other country, to the advantage of both parties. Actually, Bulgaria in the past has participated in joint productions with the USSR, Italy, and Czechoslovakia.

The young spectator was not forgotten last year. A pleasant surprise for young and old was the color film "The Captain," dedicated to present-day children's romance. So far this film has won five international prizes at film festivals in Venice and Gijon (Spain).

Algerian Theme

Something new on the Bulgarian screen was the full-length documentary "Festival of Hope," a poetic film which echoes the delirious joy of the Algerian people during the first days of freedom. This film also received international recognition, winning two prizes at last year's Moscow Film Festival.

"The Inspector and the Night" marks Bulgaria's successful debut in the field of the criminal-psychological tragicomedy. At the last Cannes Film Festival Bulgaria was represented by the epic production of "Tobacco," reflecting the turbulent social events of the '30s up to the end of the war.

Last year our Feature Film Studio again took a long look back into the nation's past all the way to the 13th century. Heroic figures from our medieval history strode across our screen in two productions Tsar Kaloyan in "Kaloyan," and the leader of what was probably the first antifeudal uprising in the world, the peasant Ivailo in "The Shepherd King."

Other new feature films worth mentioning are "Between the Tracks," "A Legend about Paissi," "There Is No Death," "The Black River" and "Unfinished Games."

Cartoons

Bulgarian cartoon and puppet films have again aroused the interest of the spectator both at home and abroad. Most outstanding among them were "The Apple," a prize-winner at the last Oberhousen Film Festival, and "Jealousy," which was noted at the recent Bergamo Film Festival, as well as "Deceitful Gosho," "Don't Blow Them Up," "Two Poles," "The Queue," "Pictures from an Exhibition," "The Wonderful Ceiling" and "History with Seals."

The documentary film makers devoted 66 titles to major contemporary events at home and abroad, or to the commemoration of historic events and personalities. For the first time they toured what was once known as the Black Continent with the camera, dedicating a number of films to the freedom-loving peoples of Africa.

In 1963 the Popular Science Film Studio also exerted itself to meet the requirements of our industrial, agricultural and cultural development. The films "My Vitosha" and "On the Tracks of History" earned international prizes at the Marseilles Film Festival, while "Nestinari" (Fire Dancers) won a special distinction at the Florence Festival of Nations.

Won Many Prizes

In speaking of prizes won at international film festivals, we may recall that they were not confined to last year's awards. Bulgarian films, both full-length and short, have won awards in the past few years, at the film festivals of San Francisco, Cannes, Moscow, Vienna, Brussels, Edinburgh, Venice, Rome, Karlovy Vary, Prague, Lille, Leipzig, Trento, Bergamo, Rimini, Rabat, Montevideo, Buenos Aires, and Acapulco.

We have entered the current year with a fairly long list of features and short films.

"The Peach Thief," a feature film drawing its theme from World War I, shows a tragic love set against the background of a senseless war between neighboring peoples.

"Midnight Adventures," a crime and adventure film devoted to Avakoum Zahov, the foremost hero of Bulgarian crime fiction, is to be released soon.

A number of films are dedicated to the social struggles of the recent past in connection with the commemoration of the 20th anniversary of Bulgaria's liberation from Germany. First among these is the monumental wide-screen production "13 Days," set against the background of the historic events surrounding the uprising of September 9, 1944. Another is "The Chain," the title of which refers both to the fetters on an escaped political prisoner, and the veritable chain of people who ultimately save him. "The Intransigents," the action of which takes place at the close of the last war, is close in theme to the other two.

The studios for short films have also concentrated their attention on marking the 20th anniversary, drawing their themes from Bulgaria's postwar achievements in the different walks of life and from her recent historic past, as well as including cultural, scenic and other films.

The Bulgarian cinema industry is preparing to hold its fourth national Varne Film Festival, as well as to take part in all the major international film festivals.

This year opens up new vistas for the development of Bulgarian film production, which has already graduated from the list of "young cinemas." As a matter of fact, last year Bulgarian films were sold to quite a few countries, including Canada, Great Britain, Eire, France, West Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Israel. We hope that in the course of the current year even more spectators abroad will make the acquaintance of the productions of Bulgaria's developing cinema industry.

German Film Directors

[A WHO'S WHO CHECK]

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

West Germany's film industry has not been able to manage a truly attention-getting international hit in 1963. Also the new year has begun all but rosy. Commercially, a series of productions fared quite well. This mainly applies to a number of crime thrillers and Karl May (German westerns) for which Horst Wendlandt's Berlin-based Rialto-Film was responsible. Here the current status of Germany's pic creators:

Axel von Ambesser [53]—One of the commercial "big three" in the country. If supplied with the right material, a man who displays charm and style. Also busy in other media — he's sort of a German Noel Coward. Critics didn't like his "Kohlhiesel's Daughters" but this country's masses went for it. He also made "Breakfast in Double-Bed."

Franz Antel [51] — Nothing for the elite. German and Austrian slapstick routine. Turned producer with "Full Heart and Empty Pockets" which laid an egg. Although a maker of mediocre movies, Antel manages to keep busy.

Karl Anton [65] — Oldtimer who hasn't made a feature film in quite some time. More busy in the tv field.

Helmuth Ashley [44] — Former cameraman. His last feature, "White Freight for Hong Kong," not shown here as yet. Also busy in the video field.

Helmut M. Backhaus [?] — Quite busy, but no particular status. Must still struggle for prominence.

Josef von Baky [62] — Still enjoys prominence but hasn't done anything lately.

Peter Beauvais [48] — Now better known as a tv film director.

Wolfgang Becker [43] — Ditto.

Alfred Braun [76] — Has long given up directing films but still active as a writer in the video field.

Eduard von Borsody [?] — Oldtimer of whom nothing has been heard for quite some time.

Geza von Cziffra [63] — Mere escapist routine. One of his last efforts was an Austrian remake of the seemingly never dying "Charley's Aunt."

Volker von Collande [50] — Tv has become his bread too.

Thomas Engel [?] — "My Daughter and I" was his last effort. Nothing special.

Erich Engels [75] — Vet pic director. His last pix date back many years now.

Wolfgang Glueck [34] — More active in the tv field.

Peter Goldbaum [50] — Nothing heard of him since his ill-fated "Golden Monkey."

Juergen Goslar [37] — Actor-director is more interested in television.

F. J. Gottlieb [33] — One of the busiest directors in the land. Mostly thrillers such as "The Black Abbot," "Secret of Black Widow" and "Phantom of Soho." His name still doesn't mean much but he is still very young and producers seem to like him.

Hans Grimm [?] — No 1963 status.

Guenter Graewert [?] — Directed "Two Whiskies And One Sofa" and "Attention, Mr. Todd" which didn't command attention.

Horst Haechler [38] — Hubby of Maria Schell still lacks directorial prominence. His "Deadly Carneval" is awaited.

Rolf Haedrich [?] — His "Delay At Marienborn" didn't do too well. He too is active in the video biz.

Veit Harlan [64]—It cost him his career to direct "Jew Suess" for Goebbels. Just died.

Dr. Falk Harnack [51] — Tv has become his major medium. But he says that he still believes in the German film — despite its murderous crisis!

Karl Hartl [65] — Nothing heard of this oldtimer recently.

Bostjan Hladnik [35] — Talented Yugoslav director whose first German pic "Erotikon — Carousel of Passions") revealed that he could be able to achieve something different or even special.

Kurt Hoffman [53] — Still rated as one of Germany's better directors. Produced and directed "Love Will Be Taught" and "The Gripsholm Castle" via his own producing Independent-Film) outfit. "Gripsholm" proved a very amusing pic.

Werner Jacobs [55] — Very active pic director. Made the Austrian "Merry Widow," the Jayne Mansfield starrer "Homesick for St. Paul," among others. Yet nothing special.

Rudolf Jugert [56] — Once a good name in the country. Then on the decline. More busy in the tv field now.

Helmut Kaeutner [56] — Despite his failures still one of the most popular pic directors in Germany. What was said last year can still be said: He seems to have lost his knack. His "House in Montevideo" was just so-so.

Werner Klinger [60] — Also joined the tv field and directed a series of vidpix. His last theatrical feature, "Night At the Sea," co-directed with Peter M. Thouet, not shown as yet.

Hans H. Koenig [51] — Nothing seen of him lately.

Hermann Kugelstadt [52] — More busy in the video field.

Fritz Lang [73] — His name still means plenty, thanks to his classics. Eventually there is talk that he'll come back and make another film.

Wolfgang Liebeneiner [58] — His last pic was "Schwejk's Cubhood," an Austrian production. It didn't contribute to his prestige.

Franz Marischka [?] — The busiest of the Marischkas. Conventional comedy stuff

Georg Marischka [41] — Son of Hubert and nephew of Ernst Marischka. His films didn't rate much attention yet he has not lost his ambition.

Paul Martin [65] — He said something like that: The German directors are not as bad as the scripts which they have to film. That the scripts are so bad, however, isn't the scriptors' fault.

Paul May [55] — Still active but hasn't been able to achieve something special in recent years.

Imo Moszkowicz [39] — Has been busy in both media. Last theatrical pic was "It Was My Pleasure," which the public liked.

Wolfgang Neuss [?] — He returned to his original trade — the cabaret.

Raphael Nussbaum [32] — Producer-director who turned out a good full-length documentary and a feature entitled "The Invisible" which didn't make the big grade

Eric Ode [53] — Average stuff for home consumption.

John Olden [45] — Is rated as one of the better German tv directors.

Rolf Olsen [?] — An active man in German and Austrian studios. His pix are tailored for the home market.

Michael Pfleghar [33] — Became known via a series of lavishly produced and imaginatively directed German musical tv programs. His first theatrical film, "The Dead One of Beverly Hills," is very anxiously awaited.

Harald Philipp [?] — Still some years ago, he showed much promise. He too a victim of the notorious German film crisis.

Hans Quest [49] — Such tv series as "The Scarf" in 1962 and "Tim Frazer" last year have made him a prominent director name in the native video field

Arthur Maria Rabenalt [59] — His last local activity was staging an operetta.

Geza von Radvanyi [?] — One of those who couldn't maintain former good reputation.

Gottfried Reinhardt [55] — His last film, "Eleven Years and a Day," proved a disappointment.

Dr. Harald Reinl [56] — Commercially the biggest director name in the country. Thanks to the German western successes, "Treasure of Silver Lake" and "Winnetou." Austrian-born Reinl will make "Winnetou, Part II" and "Winnetout, Part III" for Rialto-Film, Berlin. Asides that he'll direct more thrillers. A busy, busy man His last thrillers included such pix as "The White Spider," "The Strangler of Blackmoor Castle" and "Room 13." His activity, in fact, is amazing.

Juergen Roland [?] — Busy in tv ("Steel Net" series) and cinema field. Last pix were "Black Panther of Ratana" and "Pirates of "Mississippi." Roland skilfully combines tv with film activities. His next theatreal feature "Davidswache."

Wolfgang Staudte [58] — One if not Germany's most compromiseless directors. He'd rather do a risky pic which flops than a conventional film. His last efforts included a remake of the John Gay-derived Brecht-Weill "Three Penny Opera" (which wasn't very convincing) and the still to be released "Unternehmen Herrenpartie" (Operation Gentleman's Party, verbal translation) which got some good advance notices.

Wolfgang Schleif [52] — Also can't complain much about lack of assignments. "Holidays Like Never Before" his last pic. An ambitious man. But he too a victim of the German film crisis.

Germans Upset At Yank Demand For Upped Terms

Frankfurt.

While the West German film theatre owners have become relatively conditioned to higher terms for American color films which run beyond the normal time limit, they are furious at the Americans' request for higher percentages on what they consider "normal black and white" films.

Latest objections offered by the West German cinema owners are aimed at a couple of American pictures, Universal's "The Birds" and Paramount's "Seven Days In May," for both of which the distributors have asked for 50% rental.

The increase from the usual 42 or 43% has been asked because, the distributors maintained, these were both expensive productions. But in the minds of the German exhibitors, they are standard-length black and white productions, and as such should rate only the normal rental.

The house owners point out that they have considerable difficulties just to stay in business these days, with the grosses down in Germany and more houses closing every week. And if they cannot ask for additional box office prices or for roadshow terms, they feel that the Americans are additionally handicapping them by asking for the "excessive" rentals.

And it looks as if new American films being brought in for the same above-the-normal rentals will meet with additional objections from the crisis-ridden German theatre industry.

Jukeboxes Spin $27,000 Monthly Jackpot for GI Europe Post Exchanges

Nuremberg.

Post exchanges in Germany, Italy and France are earning about $27,000 a month via nickle-a-spin jukeboxes, according to an official with the European Exchange System here.

The EES maintains 270 jukeboxes, mostly Wurlitzer, that carry from 100 to 200 records. It buys the boxes outright, and figures that in a good location a jukebox in a military snackbar can earn up to $300 a month.

Not only that — but the GIs in Europe are among the few people in the world who can still hear the most popular platters for 5c, since elsewhere it's usually now up to a dime a disk.

BERLIN-MUNICH-HAMBURG AND WIESBADEN STUDIOS

Berlin.

Statistics show that 64 West German films (coproductions included) were made last year. Of these 64 features, 20 were produced in Berlin, seven in Munich, one in Hamburg, two in Austria and eight in other foreign places. The remaining 26 films were made on locations throughout the country. Of the 20 features made in W-Berlin, 12 were shot at Artur Brauner's CCC studios at Berlin-Spandau, one was produced at UFA studios and seven films were made out at Arca studios, Pichelsberg. The seven films made in Munich were all produced at Bavaria studios, Geiselgasteig.

BERLIN MUST KEEP 'A' STATUS

Exports of German Features Better, But Not In America

Frankfurt.

It's a constant source of disappointment to the German filmmakers that, although American-made pictures are Number One money-makers in West Germany, the United States market isn't particularly receptive to the German film product.

Only a brief five years ago, Germans were speaking optimistically of "the invasion of the German films in the U.S. market," as there appeared to be some major clicks. The lurid story of a Frankfurt prostitute and the effect of the booming economy on her and her sin sisters, "Rosemarie," was a big hit even if many sensitive Germans felt that it did more to distort their image than it benefitted in the cash boxes.

Others like "The Captain from Koepenick" and "The Devil's General" promised to help the German film industry keep going, but of late the going has been more difficult for German product in America.

Right now, the German industryites are pinning their hopes on a recent quartet that did big business in 1963 at home, and which it hopes will be smashes in the States. "The Knowledge of a Man in a Furnished Room," "The Treasure of the Silver Sea," "I Am Only a Woman" and "The Black-White-Red Four Poster" are the big hopes at the moment.

But on other fronts, the German films are succeeding.

Even though the Germans complained that the Italian filmmakers were on an all-out "German hate kick" and trying to revive the animosities of World War II with unfair or inaccurate films about Nazi atrocities, the German films did well in Italy last year.

During 1963, there were 24 new German films premiered in Rome, not bad when it's considered that the German output for the year was only about double that number. Take-home pay for the Germans ran to about 2% of the year's business, with excellent results reported from "Treasure" again along with "The Door with Seven Keys," "Guesthouse on the Thames," "Secret of the Yellow Narcissus," "The White Spider," "Marriage of Mr. Mississippi," "With Raspberry Syrup All Goes Better" and "The Last of Mrs. Chaney," as the best money-makers last year with the Italians.

Yugo's German Westerns

Big new love-affair is that between the German and the Yugoslav producers, with the latest trend in Germany to make "westerns" shot in Yugoslavia, and with a portion of Slav money. Last year, for instance, 24 German films played to good business in Yugoslavia, and at another advantage money-wise — the films were only inexpensively subtitled, instead of dubbed, as the small Yugoslav audience doesn't warrant the expenditures of the $7,500 needed to synchronize a film in this lingo.

Meanwhile, the two countries are working hand-in-hand in subsequent film deals. Twenty pics made in Yugoslavia in the last two years counted on German funds, either by a co-production deal or by some splitting of costs.

And of the profits being taken out of Yugoslavia via the German films in the cinemas, a part of the money is paid in cash, the rest used to bring Yugoslav documentaries to West Germany, thus sending more profits up the two-way street.

Business with Spain was also relatively good last year, and the German filmmakers were delighted to tote up export business to the amount of about $6,000,000 last year.

While the foreign grosses were down about $400,000 from the year before, the German production had dipped considerably, too. And all things considered, that looked like a nice round figure for German films to do outside the homeland.

Totals Down In 1964

Frankfurt.

Both the American distributors in Germany and the German producers are down to about half the number of films which were marketed in the peak postwar years here. U. S. reached a postwar high in 1958, when the MPEA members and the independents imported 242 films into West Germany (as against the 109 German productions that year). Best for German films was 1955, when the native sons came up with 122 films.

It's estimated that the Americans will in 1964 have about 120 new pictures in West Germany. German volume should be about 60 features.

Bonn Stays With 'Encouragement,' Though Dubious

Bonn.

The Federal government's scheme to stimulate better productions hasn't worked so far, but the "certain date" to qualify has been extended. Hope is to get "outstanding" German features in the works, based on a reading of scripts.

Originally the plan offered $50,000 apiece to seven German films that the West German Ministry of the Interior thought were "worthy" in 1962, with the added regulation that the films must start production by the end of 1963. Only two of the seven made the production date — partly because the government subsidy would be paid only when the films were finished, and the hard-pressed German producers were unable to round up the starting credit by the deadline.

Now, though, the Ministry of the Interior has selected 10 more films for 1963, which have to be started by the end of 1964, and has declared that it is extending the deadline for the previous five from the year before.

That means the German government will have to come up with aid in the form of a hefty $750,000 by the end of this year, if the fifteen films actually get into the shooting stage.

On the other side of the budget, though, the German Interior Ministry has stated that it is cutting the entire budget for aid to German films to about $1,500,000 for 1964—and that will have to include the support for the Film Festival in Berlin, citations for the documentaries, and prizes to the winning pics at Berlin. Just how half of the total can go to the 15 outstanding pics, and the other half be split for all the various other film activities supported in some way by the German government is a problem no one seems to have solved as yet.

Meanwhile, the film industryites are noting sourly that it's a pretty slim budget that the government is offering to support its troubled home film makers.

UFA HOUSES REPORT BIZ UP IN GERMANY

Duesseldorf, April 28.

Last year turned out to be "the best business year for the UFA theatre chain since the combine was founded in 1955," according to chairman of the board Baron von Ostman here. Chain now includes four houses on ground owned by UFA, 25 under contract to the chain, and four partly owned by UFA. Total seats are 24,100.

The houses reported that busi-

BAUER DESPERATE FOR BIG STARS

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

Berlin Film Festival, or "Berlinale" as it is called in the local trade lingo, has been criticized for its "abundance of inferior films" and/or "lack of quality pictures" in recent years. In order to raise the festival's artistic standard, there were (also local) scribes who even suggested that Berlin give up its "A" festival status. This move, the scribes felt, would enable Berlin to get better films. (Under the regulations for an "A" festival, a film can only be entered in competition if it has not been shown outside of its country of origin at the time. This, quite naturally, militates against the showing here of many a good one).

Dr. Alfred Bauer, the head of the annual Berlin FilmFestival, has never left any doubt that he feels it important that Berlin sticks to its "A" status even—if necessary—at the expense of quality films. His rationale is that it took Berlin seven years to get its "A" status in 1957 and that such recognition from the Federation of International Film Producers) is certainly not lightly to be regarded in the light of so many film festivals all over the world at present.

Said Bauer: "I think if Berlin would surrender its 'A' rating, it would lose all international importance. It would become a second-rate event. It is true that we then could show big films that ran at other festivals before but it is rather doubtful whether the international press would be interested in coming to Berlin to see films that they have seen before. Also, if we give up the 'A' rating there is the possibility that another German city will launch a feature film festival of its own." (In fact, there have been suggestions to "move" the Berlin film festival to Munich. Berlin, of course, stood up at once against these Munich-inspired suggestions.)

The suggestions that Berlin give up its "A" status were advanced after the 1962 festival and again last year.

Bauer gathered the elite of the Berlin film press at a special meeting. The meeting also saw the presence of city's No. 1 critic, Friedrich Luft, who had once published the above suggestion in his influential paper. Bauer first discussed the matter and then asked the pressmen that everyone who's in favor of the "A" status should raise his hand. Two did not vote (Luft included) but otherwise all showed a clear pro-"A" attitude.

At this occasion, incidentally, the question came up why Berlin has been seeing so few worthwhile American films. In Cannes or Venice, for example, one can see quite a variety of interesting new American films via the information sections. Even San Sebastian often gets better American product than Berlin.

The Whyfore

There is a simple answer to that. The import of U.S. features into such countries as France, Italy or Spain is subject to a certain contingent. Every American film that is running at the above mentioned festivals gives the Americans an additional import license. This is why the Americans are more interested in these festivals. In Germany, they haven't got those fundamental import worries. The German market is fully liberalized and they can import into the country as many pix as they wish.

Quite apart from that, one cannot actually compare Venice and Cannes with Berlin. In view of Berlin's position as an isolated city, it is involuntarily also a political festival. Also, it is not a child of tourist-conscious city fathers. It has no Lido beach as at Venice and no Croisette as at Cannes and has consequently also in this respect a different climate.

Tax-On-Theatre-Ticket-Volume (Martin Plan) Confronts Yanks With Odious German Decision

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

U.S. Motion Picture Export Assn.'s situation is "very cloudy" in West Germany at the moment, with the income that the American distributors earn in this country possibly to be reduced by a significant three to five percent. "Everything depends on the Martin Plan, whether it goes through and in what final form," explained Stephen Beers, MPEA chief in West Germany.

"There is still some question as to whether it will pass in its present form, and we have been under some pressure to come out one way or another on the proposed plan," Beers noted.

In effect, the plan was initially proposed to levy a special 5% fee on the grosses of all the cinemas in West Germany, the money being raised from the fee to go into a fund to aid the West German producers.

Under the initial change, it was decided that this 5% would be levied only on the film houses with a yearly gross of over 200,000 German marks (more than $50,000). Now it is being proposed that there be a sliding scale, with 3% take from the theatres in the annual category of 200,000 to 400,000 marks (from $50,000 to $100,000), 4% for those grossing from 400,000 to 600,000 marks annually ($100,000 to $150,000), and the maximum fee for those earning more than 600,000 marks (over $150,000) a year.

Some of the American distributors in Germany quietly feel that it would be to their advantage to oppose the plan because in effect it is taking money from their grosses in order to subsidize their competitors.

In theory, though, the attitude of the American distributors abroad has been that a good German film industry with which the U.S. films can compete is desirable. Yanks have been quick to stress that the existence of a local industry means that the native theatres will have added interest in films, as such, native and foreign.

Some Subsidizations

In Italy, France, Spain and Britain there is some federal subsidizing of pictures. And the West German films, struggling along without similar support, are in the difficult position of having to come up with product good enough to compete for rentals in Common Market lands and in Britain, and also to compete with the big films turned out by the Americans.

According to Beers, official decision on this would come from New York via Paris, and that of course "MPEA wouldn't want to be the whipping boys in case that the plan is defeated, and the German producers could then claim that we had sabotaged the German films."

If the plan went through in the form now proposed with the sliding scale for cinemas with differing annual incomes, the MPEA members would be just about the hardest hit of all the distributors vying in the German market. This is because its product plays off in the larger houses and the big cities, doing less well in a smaller community. Hence, the American films would usually be subjected to the maximum bite.

In some of the German states, the entertainment tax that once claimed a piece of the initial profits has now been ceased. In the state of North Rhine-Westphalia, for instance, if the film has a "predicate" meaning that the proper German authorities have deemed it "worthy" or "particularly worthy," and it played along with a similarly classified documentary short, there is no tax.

Martin Plan was initially described as a replacement for this tax, but since some areas have dropped the entertainment tax, the Martin Plan would mean a brand-new levy on grosses.

Last year, the Americans earned about $25,000,000 on their films playing in West Germany. And with about 120 films due to come in for the 1964-65 calendar, they could hope to earn about the same amount again.

$25,000-Per-Film Cartel Sends Stars Out of Germany

Frankfurt.

How're you gonna keep 'em down in the Black Forest, after they've seen Beverly Hills?

That's the big question the German film industry is asking. With the much cussed-and-discussed salary levels still maintained by the German Producers' Union (so that a top German actor or actress cannot be paid more than $25,000 for a film role) it seeems that more and more of the talented people are turning to the greener hills of California.

Recent German filmites who have deserted their native lands for American films include Elke Sommers and Christine Kauffman, the latter having renounced her film career since marrying Tony Curtis.

Romy Schneider, too, is no longer seen in German films, instead concentrating on American pictures and French stage appearances.

One of the first to renounce Germany was big money-maker Curt Jurgens. Ever since the salary controls were clapped on, Juergens has refused to work here. He would do so only if he could get a bigger slice of the take by being the producer, he noted recently.

Once the German films have built a star, it's getting customary for that person to check out, leaving the German film industry with another problem to surmount of where to get the new celebrities willing to work for scale.

'INTERNATIONAL' STARS IN GERMAN FEATURES

Berlin.

German films themselves may not seem very international but stars in German films are. Of the 20 most popular (according to last "Starometer") male and female German players, three are Swiss, three are Austrian, two are British, one is American and one bears a Liechtenstein passport—in other words: Every second player is a foreigner.

Top female position is held by Swiss Liselotte Pulver, followed by Austrian Nadja Tiller and German Ruth Leuwerik. Then comes British citizen Lilli Palmer, Swiss Maria Schell, Marianne Koch and Johanna von Koczian, two German actresses. German-born Hildegard Knef or Neff, married to British actor Dave Cameron, has become a British national. Next on that list are Elisabeth Flickenschildt, German, and Australian Romy Schneider.

In the male field, Germans Heinz Ruehmann and Gert Froebe hold fop positions, then come American Peter van Eyck, Austrian Peter Alexander, Austrian-born O. W. Fischer whose passport reads Liechtenstein, followed by the Germans Goetz George, Walter Giller, Hansjoerg Felmy and Hardy Krueger. Then comes Swiss Maximilian Schell, Maria's Oscar-decorated brother.

There are also various foreigners among th runners-up such as

Austria's Incurable Lethargy; Studios Serve German Video; Imported 448 Foreign Films

By EMIL MAASS

Vienna.

The diagnosis on the motion picture production industry of Austria is very simple: aggravated, long-neglected lethargy. Nobody ever manages to effect a cure. Not that there have not been a certain number of ideas proposed. One of these advocated the creation of an Austrian Film Institute. It sounded imposing. But it broke down under public discussion when the question of financing, ever crucial here, developed that nobody could think of anything but the old, old, old idea of taxing theatre admissions, already well taxed needless to say.

The Austrian Film Institute was conceived in the brains cells of bureaucrats and immediately took the form of contemplated craeyoj of 10 sinecures "necessary" to run the Institute, plus an "archive official." These personages, typically immune from dismissal, once appointed, would have made the decisions of what to produce.

When this idea was shrugged aside, the situation remained about where it has been for the past five years.

In 1963, with 15 feature films, the lowest production figure was reached. Most active are Franz Antel and Stadthallen with their comedies. Some of them actually are quite good, but only intended for the German language countries. Sascha Film is on the same level. VARIETY was told over and over again—and we quote "The Austrian producers are not interested in selling their output to art houses abroad. The extra $1,000 does not interest us."

Local politics entered into the production field of Stadthallen (Sport City Hall) Company, operated by Adolf Eder. Conservative members of city council charged misuse of public funds, as the Stadthallen company was founded by the Socialists. But Socialists proved, that their lightweight comedies earned a slight profit. He ended up saying "It's better to produce bad motion pictures, than none at all—and besides, there is a lack of good writers."

With 448 foreign films imported during 1963, Austrian theatre owners did less than a so-so business. More than 60 closed down. MGM leads with 53 films in playoff. AFEX presented 35, Rank 21 (15 in original language). Total American imports were 148, West Germany supplied 49 and France 48.

For the first time, a sliding scale on rentals was agreed upon between distributors and house owners. Top rent was 47.5%. The new system will start with 40% and according attendance, the distributor might reduce it to a minimum of 30%.

Film studios exist practically on rentals paid by tv companies of West Germany exclusively. VARIETY was told, that this situation is unbearable for the future, as tv productions demand much less time, the result being, that many Austrian film stages are vacant for weeks, if not months. Wien Film Studio, as well as Otto Duerer studio in Salzburg, point out, that operation costs remain stable, due to the one year contracts with their employees and workers. Mere occasional appearances of American producers cannot ameliorate the financial situation, "regular" renting is necessary.

With rentals, living costs and general expenses having risen to international average, Vienna and all Austria now has less to offer. Its own motion picture industry moves along, unnoticed and unmentioned on the international market.

Television Says 'We Saved German Film Industry'

Frankfurt.

"The television industry is the salvation of the German film industry," claimed General Manager Werner Hess, chief of the Hessischer Rundfunk, Frankfurt outlet of the First German Radio and TV Net. His statement recently has set off a blast of counterclaims from the hard-pressed German film producers who constantly object to the unfair tax-free competition offered by the German television, by the lack of controls on the age limits for viewers (while attendance in German cinemas is strictly regulated for various ages for different films), by the many films playing on tv.

But generally, it looks as if Hess has some points on his side.

Since 1960, Bavaria Studios, with the largest film and television technical equipment in Europe, have done over 400 television plays, entertainment shows and series for the two West German television nets. Of the founding capital of Bavaria Studios there is 49% owned by the Bavaria Filmkunst Corporation, and 25.5% each in the hands of the advertising organizations of South German Television of Stuttgart and the West German TV of Cologne, assuring that those two stations will utilize the property to the maximum.

Bavaria for instance now offers 10 halls for film and television production plus five special studios for synchronization and mixing, a special music studio and trick studio, 37 cutting and showing rooms, plus copy factory for redoing 16mm and 35mm films in black and white. The group was founded with $3,750,000 and has added another $2,500,000 in investments since 1960, and is running well in the black, thanks to tv.

The Assn. of Technical Workers for Films and Television have just filed an objection against the tendency of the West German television stations to build their own studios for production and copywork, thus beginning to set up their own little empires.

They note that there is a danger of over-capacity, while the studio facilities that once made films exclusively should be utilized for television. In 1963, for instance, the studios with a capacity for making 70 full-length feature films, made only 50 German cinema films, and rightly had to fill their time with television. Now the technical workers fear that in the future the studios will be faced with unbooked space, and eventually there will be insufficient work for the technical employees.

'Runaway' Here Too?

They noted, too, that while the American film producers had formerly used the German studios, they are now going more toward Spain and Yugoslavia, where the costs are lower.

Meantime, there is no difficulty — but they foresee it.

In another way, too, television is helping the films, claims a German television industryite. Television is snapping up films, old and new, foreign and local. Producing a full-length film for television costs about $125,000 in Germany — while a film can be purchased for from $7,500 to $10,000 now.

German television last year was "kind enough to the film industry"

IDLE-MOOD FANS AND FILMS IN KIND

Frankfurt.

"To kill the time" was the reason avowed by one in five persons for going to a film, in a recent study conducted in West Germany. Most of the people were just looking for a way to pass a couple of hours, without too much concern for the subject matter of the picture—only that it be light diversion.

That, to the world film producers who feel they must come up with weighty, significant, and timely stuff, is a bitter blow. But it explains why more and more the German film producers are letting their sights sink lower toward the murder mystery and cowboy themes that are proving popular here.

Of the cinema-goers questioned in the study (made at seven first-run theatres), about 46% noted a special interest in the drama or the book on which it was based, or in the stars, or the locale in which the film was made. Another 29% had been attracted to the picture because of advertising or film critiques or comment from friends.

Largest group of visitors, incidentally, fell into the 10 to 30 age group, which bought 49% of the tickets; 31% were in the 30 to 50 category, and 20% over 50.

"The cinemas are becoming more gruesome all the time," a West German film critic noted recently. He explained that the film titles, and the theatre ads, were accenting the horror, the murders, the killing and shooting more than ever before.

While only nine of the 400 film titles that appeared in the 1963-64 calendar used the word "Love," the word "Murder" or "Killing" appeared 24 times—up from the nine times it was used the year before. Words like Hell, Devil, Satan, Horror appeared in another dozen film titles.

Women, Girls, Virgins were used in 17 titles (as against Man or Men only eight times), there were 13 Secret Nights, and Bed cropped up six times, with Sex and Sin each coming in for two title appearances. And there were four "Nakeds."

Big words for the upcoming calendar are "Karl May," with the revival of interest in the western novels written by the German dramatist starting a "Karl May Wave" here.

And with the interest continuing in "krimis," two courageous German producers are risking their capital with a pair of productions costing over a million marks — $250,000 — a high investment for a local film.

Swiss Paul Hubschmid (in Hollywood once Paul Christian), Argentinian-born Carlos Thompson, Hungarian-born Marika Roekk, Danish Vivi Bach, to name some.

Also quite a number of foreigners among the directors, especially Austrians such as Harald Reinl, Georg Marischka, Georg Tressler, Edwin Zbonek, Franz Antel, etc. The Hungarian element has always been substantial in the German pix. To name some: Geza von Cziffra, Joseph von Baky, Geza von Radvanyi, Madrid-based Ladislao Vajda, etc. Quite a few Americans too, such as Frank Wisbar, Gottfried Reinhardt, Victor Vicas, Werner Klingler, Robert Siodmak most of them former Germans anyway.

German Film Theatre Shrink

Berlin.

Census of West German (including West Berlin) cinemas amounted to something like 6,000 last year. An exact figure as of Jan. 1, 1963 showed the number 6,300. One year before (1962) the number ran to 6,675. The below statistics indicate that there is a downward trend in all W-German cities:

	1959	1960	1961	1962
W-Berlin	265	261	232	208
Hamburg	179	173	164	134

German Pix Tops In Germany

Frankfurt.

At least eight films will run over the 3,000,000 mark of tickets sold in West Germany this year. Big news is that of these eight, only two are American, (and even of that pair, one is technically British). Other six are German.

Surprise German clicks (several of which have already been sold for distribution in the U.S.) include . . ."Heimweh nach St. Pauli" (Homesick for St. Pauli, the nightclub district in Hamburg), a Rapid production; a mystery titled "Das Haus in Montevideo" (The House in Montevideo) from Hans Domnick Productions; Team production of "Das grosse Liebesspiel" (The Great Love Play); two of the Rialto "westerns" that have caused a whole new trend in Germany, "Winnetou I" and "Der Schatz im Silbersee" (Treasure in the Silversea); and the Ulrich production of a comedy about twin sisters titled "Kohlhiesel's Toechter" (Kohlhiesel's Daughters).

Two U.S. films making the grade are United Artists' "Irma La Douce" and Columbia-Bavaria's "Lawrence of Arabia," which is brought into Germany as a British film and hence not included in the American grosses this year from West Germany.

Munich Studios Hum: Much Work For TV

By JOHN KAFKA

Munich.

It remains remark-worthy no doubt that a country divided in half, as is Germany, has such extensive production facilities. West Berlin, Munich and Hamburg is each a film-producing center while across that ashbrick wall there is still another film center in East Berlin.

Munich's studios go back to before World War I and were very active during the Weimar Republic period. Much of the work here has had a co-production flavor in recent years.

Of the earliest plants here, Trafilco, Weiss-Blau, and Bayrische Filmindustrie definitely belong to the past. Arnold & Richter, abbreviated to "Arri," can be found today one block away from the place where their silent flickers were made half a century ago. There are three stages with floor space of 1,100 square yards, and buzzing with activities.

The studio founded in 1919 by Peter Ostermayr (still around as a producer), subsequently and for a long stretch of time the home base of Emelka Films, has grown on the same spot to Europe's second largest film factory under the monicker of Bavaria Geiselgasteig. This has at present 10 stages with a floor space total of 6,100 square yards (Stage 4 alone covering 1,900) plus a 333,000 sq. yd. of outdoors shooting area at its disposal.

Among the accumulation of more recent studios that clustered around the endurable nucleus of Bavaria and Arri as time went on, note, a new Riva-Unterfoehring's of six stages (floor space: 2,600 sq. yd.), Telstar-Tulbeck, formerly named Carlton (three stages, 735 sq. yd.), Divina-Baldham (three stages, 925 sq. yds.), and a number of well-equipped one-stage plants in neighboring communities such as Schonger (floor space: 260 sq. yds.), Ammersee (315 sq. yds.), and Elan-Sauerlach (216 sq. yds.).

Arri concerns itself principally with the invention and development of novel lenses and camera processes ("Arriflex") and rents its stages to tv productions, abiding by a command of the times which all but one of the other Munich studios cannot escape, either.

Lone exception is Bavaria-Geiselgasteig. Although this plant according to its tie-ups with the West-German and Southern-German outlets of the first video network as well as with the whole of the Second (Mainz) Program has turned out, in 1963, no less than 33 video plays of one-hour length or more, 30 popular entertainment features, and 37 short subjects, it still maintained its status as numerically strongest manufacturer of films for theatrical consumption in this country.

After discharging the physical production of such American features as "One, Two, Three," "The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm," "Captain Sinbad," and "The Great Escape," a total of seven German theatrical film productions, or co-productions, came off the Geiselgasteig floors during the past 12 months, to wit:

"My Daughter and I," Gloria's Heinz-Ruehmann starrer; "The House in Montevideo," another Ruehmann epic, produced by Hans Domnick for Constantin release; "Vacation from Myself," Franz Seitz—Constantin; "Two Whiskeys, One Sofa," Maria Schell vehicle, Star Alliance — Constantin; "A Man In His Best Years," Maran Films, Schorcht Distribution; "Full Heart and Empty Pockets," Loewant Productions, Columbia-Bavaria release; and "Watch Out, Mr. Dodd," Heinz Ruehmann once more, Divina-Gloria.

Bookings for the immediate future forecast a much higher total in 1964, there is a sharp upward trend in evidence. Two years ago, the studio's budget set aside $4 million for technical innovations and further stage enlargements half of which has already been spent at this time.

West Germany OK With Shorts And Documentaries

Berlin.

In general, the West German short film enjoys internationally a better reputation than the feature film. It is also more successful as evidenced by the fact that quite a number of German shorts have been able to win prizes at international festivals while, in turn, feature pix of W-German origin hardly rated attention. There are obviously young talents in the country's short film camp. Not to overlook, of course, the short film makers have it easier in so many respects. For one thing, they can dedicate themselves more to experiments. Experiments, however, in the feature film camp are a considerable risk under the current conditions in this country.

Hello (a combination of his first two names, Helmut and Lothar), Berlin documentary filmmaker who also produces industrial and other pix of commercial calibre, said this: "For various reasons it is unfortunately very difficult in Germany to make a good feature film. That's why I am still waiting. I prefer producing documentaries to mediocre feature films."

In view of the present low artistic standard of the German feature film, the question has often been raised whether there aren't any good short film makers who eventually could turn out a good feature in this country. And there was action: In February 1962, a bunch of young German intellectual short film makers got together in Oberhausen (at the then 8th W-German Short Film Festival), signed a manifesto and declared "Papa's cinema is dead." They prophesied a new era. Except for one film ("Bread of Former Youth") nothing happened. These young filmites who seemed to burst with new ideas are still mainly concerned with shorts. They keep proving that they are good technicians but they go overboard with formalisms. This also applied to the above mentioned pic, "Bread of Former Youth." This production gave them the chance to work as they please, but it proved a big disappointment.

In fact, more or less the only young German film director who achieved something that stirred interest was Will Tremper. His first two feature films were "refreshing departures" from the conventional cliche in several respects. It may be noteworthy to add that Tremper has nothing to do with the "Papa's cinema is dead" movement and

MUNICH: (1) ACTION AND (2) HOPE

By JOHN KAFKA

Munich.

Munich's business directory lists exactly three dozen filmmaking companies with headquarters in this city. As shown on the chart below, only 20 of them are actually engaged in production. Other 16 await the long-promised governmental support of the film industry. So-called "Martin Bill" is far from becoming law as last year at this date. So the "mark-timers," with veteran producer Peter Ostermayr, Aura-Molo, Rhombus-Tischendorf, NDF-Schwarz (after scoring heavily with their "Black-white-red Fourposter"), and Georg Witt notably prominent, are either idling or turning to comparatively greener fields such as tv or to dubbing. As for the active crowd, the term "production" must be stretched wide enough to cover also those coproductions for which all the essential work is being done in Munich while the particular setup of the team might necessitate shooting in Paris, Rome or (most frequently) Yugoslavia. Even so, coproductions or not, more than half of the number turned out during the past twelve months were also "physically produced" in Munich.

Here is the compilation:

JOHN ALBIN

Last year Albin combined with Hollywood's Peter Bernays to write, produce, and direct jointly "No Survivors, Please," for Schorcht distrib, with Maria Perschy and Robert Cunningham. This year, the same duo in the same triple capacity readies "Lost Lady," starring Paul Christian and Boy Gobert.

BALK-NEUE EMELKA

Having overcome its wait-and-see period, this outfit teamed up with Avala Productions of Belgrade, to put Germany's outstanding "angry middle-aged man" in the directorial field, Wolfgang Staudte, to work again. "Stag Party" (Schorcht distrib) is a bitter war story taking place 20 years after the war. Next on the slate: "The Tyrant and Justice," based on a Werner Bergengruen novel.

PETER BAMBERGER

Completed and world-preemed, both in Salzburg, "Encounter in Salzburg" which brings up to date the medieval miracle play, "Everyman," still better known by the tag of "Jedermann" as adapted by Hugo von Hofmannsthal and presented at the Salzburg Dome Square during the annual festival. Curd Jurgens plays the lead supported by French femmes Nadia Gray and Danielle Gaubert. Direction: Max Friedmann. Currently preparing "The Flying Carpet," an Arabian Nights tale retold in terms of our times.

H. J. BOLDT

Specializes in "hard-school" sexploitation mellers financed, partly coproduced and exported by Boldt. Completed (in collaboration with Rewa Films): "Devil in the Body." Coming up: "The Caves of the Living Dead" (co-produced by Objective Films, Munich-London), with Akos von Ratony handling directorial chores, and Erika Remberg, Carl Mohner, John Kitzmiller in the principal roles; then an "erotic espionage" feature tagged "Secret Weapon," and offering Nadia Gray as a "new Mata Hari."

CONSTELLATION

Columbia's Middle-European filmmaking enterprise, formerly headed by Hermann Schwerin, now with Walter Proehl at the reins, is not a motion picture company in the term's precise meaning. It rather acts as midwife and nurse at other producers' creations as it helps in bringing the basic project, the scenario and, eventually, the casting to light, and then feeds the fledgling with 50% cash financing plus 25% studio credits. With exporter Carrol Hellmann's "Omnia" also being on the team and providing another 15% in advances on foreign sales, this might be all any struggling filmmaker could be wishing for, except that the outcome is still dependent on the quality of the finished product which in the case of the recent "Full Heart and Empty Pockets" (see below "Loewant Films") turned out to be poor. Constellation's plans for the immediate future (with no producers singled out as yet) include: "The Boss Had an Idea," with Jean Seberg and Jean-Paul Belmondo; a comedy with the whimsical title "Baby Hamilton," and a picturization of an actual mass murder case that once kept the city of Duesseldorf in horror, as yet untitled. Awaiting release (through Columbia-Bavaria) is "The Wastrel," the 19th Century play by Austrian classic Ferdinand Raimund, a faithfully photographed Viennese Burg-theater performance, with Kurt Meisel directing and Joseph Meinrad in the title role.

CORONA

Mainly engaged in coproductions with French and Italian companies, Alexander Grueter's outfit produced, with Copernique Films, Paris, "My Uncle, the Gangster," and, aided by Gaumont, Paris, and Sancro Films, Rome, "Monsieur," the latter supposed to be Jean Gabin's swan song in the motion picture medium. (Rest assured, he meanwhile already announced his next film.) Lilo Pulver, Germany's b.o. magnet No. 1 plays the femme lead. At this time, Corona has settled preliminaries for "The Weary Transgressors," another coproduction with Copernique, Don Siegel directing, Nadja Tiller heading the cast, and, teamed up with Avon Films, London, "the One-eyed Soldiers."

DIVINA

This is Gloria Distributions' production mill which yielded its own Baldham Studios to tv feature fabrication and therefore had to work out its Heinz Ruehmann starrer, "My Daughter and I" at the Bavaria-Geiselgasteig plant. Recent accomplishments also include collaboration on "Piccadilly, Twelve Minutes Past Midnight," London-located whodunit under the direction of Rudolf Zehetgruber, with Ann Smyrner and Peter Van Eyck in the leads. Future projects, although numerous, are still in too early a planning stage to be announced at this time.

HANS DOMNICK

Creator of deservedly successful travelogues "Dream Roads of the World" and sequel set up headquarters in Munich to make "The House in Montevideo," second filmization of the Curt Goetz comedy, this time with Heinz Ruehmann and Ruth Leuwerick as the leading couple and ace director Helmuth Kaeutner governing the takes at Bavaria-Geiselgasteig. Domnick's future schedule seems to pass by Munich again.

GLORIA

Aside from Divina (see above), this distribution company has a production outfit under its own name. Principally reserved for coproductions, it is joining forces with French C.I.C.C. to turn out a picture, "Angelique." Shooting has started early in April, in Paris.

PETER GOLDBAUM

Last year, this company did "The Breadwinner," based on Somerset Maugham's "The Golden Ass," directed by Mr. Goldbaum, with Gerd Froebe and Hilde Krahl prominent in the cast. Subsequently a switch was made to the procedure of acquiring plays with film possibilities and trying them out on the legit stage before eventual conversion into motion pictures. Francois Campeaux' comedy "Les enfants du coeur" ("Heart's Children"), having had a successful run in Munich's "Arcades Theatre," is now the next item on the company's film production schedule.

LOEWANT FILMS

Nursed by Constellation (see above) and teamed up with Italian Geos and Sincar Productions, this Munich-based outfit made "Full Heart and Empty Pockets," with Alexandra Stewart, Linda Christians, Dominique Boschero, Francoise Rosay; Giovanni Mastrocinque directing. Producers Karl Antel and Carl Szokoll now laying the groundwork to a couple of comedies: "Hullygully in Tyrol," and a variation on the Lysistrata team, set against a football background, and aptly titled "A Six : Sex Tie."

MARAN

Schorcht, Munich's very active and, accordingly, upcoming distribution company, set this one up as their film-producing department. First result was a social-significance-slanted comedy. "Man in His Best Years," piloted by tv-master Franz Peter Wirth, starring Germany's most promising young character actor, Karl Michael Vogeler. Plans for the immediate future still under cover.

MCS-KG

Modern Cinema Systems provides the historically unique instance in filmmaking wherein motion picture production does not stem from a financial opportunity, nor a desire for new accomplishments in any field of art and showmanship but merely from the need of commercially exploiting a new technical invention. MCS 70, a fresh large-screen process, apparently could not get off the ground unless it were demonstrated to a worldwide cinema public in a screen epic. Then, "Flying Clipper," turned out just for such gadget-promoting purposes by MCS heads Travnicek and Hardt, and directors Nussgruber and Leitner, scored on the artistic side even more heavily than on the technical one. Meanwhile the company developed "MCS Studio Camera," allegedly another great innovation in the lensing field. While this is going to be put to the test already on loan-out to other filmmakers, it will advance final proof like its predecessor only through another motion picture. On their forthcoming production slate, MCS-KG have a monumental item depicting the life of Italian air general Umberto Nobile and his two history-making polar flights in 1926 and 1928.

ERNST NEUBACH

Just wrapped up: "Dog Eats Dog," coproduction with Unione Cinematografica, Rome, Carl Szokoll producing, Hollywood's Albert Zugsmith handling directorial chores, with Jayne Mansfield and Cameron Mitchell. This was preceded by "The Cavern" (jointly with Cine-Doris, Rome), with Rosanna Schiaffino, John Saxon, and Brian Aherne, piloted by Edgar Ulmer. In course of preparation: "Your Body Is Not Yours," Hildegard Neff in the lead, Leonide Moguy directing, a German-French coproduction, and "Manuela and the Rebels" to be brought out by German-French-Italian teamwork.

OMNIA-EICHBERG

This film-producing arm of Carrol Hellmann's export firm, Omnia, does not turn out pix on its own but exclusively in conjunction with other German as well as Roman and Parisian companies, e.g. "See Venice and Die" together with French Cocinor and Metzger & Woog, and Italian Adelphia) with Sean Flynn, Karin Baal, Madeline Robinson, Hannes Messemer, under the direction of Andre Versini, or "Kali Yug, Goddess of Vengeance" (Serena, Rome, and Criterion, Paris, piloted by Mario Camerini, cast including Senta Berger, Lex Barker, Paul Guers, and Ian Hunter.

ROXY

Luggi Waldleitner's ambitious and quality-conscious production outfit came pretty close to becoming the only casualty on the Munich film scene. Aside from the poor showing some Roxy features like "Always on Weekdays" or "Eleven Years and One Day" made at the b.o. difficulties besetting Nora Distributions and, recently, the unexpected closing-down of Playhouse Productions (which were supposed to salvage Roxy-Project "24 Hours in the Life of a Woman") forced Waldleitner into a temporary stoppage and an arrangement with his creditors. However, with Nora put back on a sound financial basis by a new association with Viennese Stadthalle Productions, Roxy is resuming its program much earlier than expected. Next on the schedule: a Lido Pulver feature.

FRANZ SEITZ

At this time, Munich's most prolific production mill running the whole scale from director Rolf Thiele's "artistic nudies" like "Venus Mountain" or "Morals 1963," through strictly home-consumption comedy stuff ("Vacation From Myself," "Tales of a Bad Boy") to some picturizations of literary masterpieces such as Thomas Mann's story "Tonio Kroeger" (with Nadja Tiller and Jean-Louis Brialy) or "Watchword: Heron," based on the Charles Morgan novel. And back again, unearthing a forgotten Italian sex dispenser, "Pitigrilly" by filming his "Chastity Belt," with Brialy again, and Jeanne Moreau. A cinematic department store, catering to as many different tastes as audiences will relish, but always proving competence and good workmanship.

HENRY SOKAL

With Aldous Huxley's "The Genius and the Goddess" on his producing schedule for a long time, Mr. Sokal at present is switching over from the wait-and-see period to actual preparation of this picture.

STAR ALLIANZ

Only German instance of a female star incorporating herself in a film-producing company. "Two Whiskeys, One Sopha," Maria Schell's first attempt at leading the cast and supervising the making of a picture at the same time, turned out a little short of successful. Next two items on her outfit's schedule, "General Frederick" (by Benjamin Constant) and "The Rebellion of Lost Souls" (this in coproduction) might present somebody else than the company boss in the distaff lead.

UTTERMAN-HARDT

Turned out, 1963, "Watch Out, Mr. Dodd," an amusing whodunit in the parody vein, starring Germany's best-loved comic, Heinz Ruehmann, with deservedly rewarding b.o. consequences. Nonetheless, this company has by now joined the "mark-timers" scouting for tv possibilities and leaving the cinema market alone until further developments.

Rudolf Schuendler [58] — A routine man. Also active in the tv field.

Robert Siodmak [?] — His last locally made film ("Tunnel 28," M-G) dates back to 1962.

R. A. Stemmle [61] — Hasn't made a theatrical feature in several years. But directed several tv films. Also scripts for pix.

Rolf Thiele [46] — Has a predilection for "erotical" themes and mostly if not always goes overboard with them. His line-up of "sex-loaded" movies includes "Venusberg," "Moral 63" and "Black-White-Red Four Poster." The latter brought him the Berlin Ernst Lubitsch Prize, a strange prize: Lubitsch never had trouble with the censors, Thiele has.

Will Tremper: [35] — Last film was "The Endless Night" which was not so bad. He is a busy writer and has several projects. It's occasionally said that more or less the only young and new German film director who achieved something that stirred interest was Will Tremper There is some truth to that.

Luis Trenker [71] — His last feature pic, "His Best Friend," dates back to 1962. Trenker is often seen on television.

George Tressler [45] — His last feature dates back a couple of years now. But he too found substantial utilization in tv.

Fritz Umgelter [?] — Works in both films and tv biz. Hasn't rated much attention lately.

Ladislao Vajda [?] — Hungarian-born director. His last pic seen here, "A Nearly Decent Girl," a German-Spanish coproduction, was unfortunately a rather dull movie Before that he made "The Light-Ship" which was not so bad. If supplied with good material, Vajda is able to turn out fine film fare.

Paul Verhoeven [63] — Kept busy with tv work.

Herbert Vesely [33] — Nothing special heard of him since he directed his highly disappointing "Bread of Former Youth."

Victor Vicas [46] — "Jack and Jenny" was his last German-made movie. It didn't rate much attention.

Alfred Vohrer [45] — One of the land's commercially most successful directors. Known to make thrillers which the public likes. His remarkable activity includes such detective thrillers as "The Squeaker," "Indian Cloth," "An Alibi Fails," "Waiting-Room of Beyond" to name a few. On his 1964 list is a big western for Horst Wendlandt.

Alfred Weidenmann [47] — Was commercially highly successful with a number of comedies. One of the country's most active and (if given the right material) most able directors.

Helmut Weiss [57] — More active and quite successful in the tv biz now.

Bernhard Wicki [44] — Still benefits from his "Bridge" success although it dates back several years. His Ingrid Bergman starrer, "The Visit," is eagerly awaited.

Jochen Wiedermann [39] — Still hasn't achieved particular prominence as yet. Quite active in the video field

Franz Josef Wild [42] — No particular status in 1962.

Franz Peter Wirth [44] — His "Confessions of a Subtenant" wasn't bad. He's kept busy, both by film and tv producers

Kurt Wilhelm [40] — More active in the tv biz.

Frank Wisbar [61] — His last film, "Durchbruch Lok 234," which depicted the flight of East Germans to W-Berlin based on authentic happenings, found praise for quite a few things. Wisbar believes in a comeback of the German film.

Eugen York [?] — Nothing heard of him for quite some time.

Edwin Zbonek [36] — He didn't click with his ambitious "Man and Beast" and is now on the commercial path. His last film was "Henchman of London" which is based on a Bryan Edgar Wallace yarn

Rudolf Zehetgruber [?] — Quite busy. "Black Cobra" (Austrian pic), "The Nylon Snare," "Piccadilly At Twelve," etc. as the titles indicate, all thrillers which are currently high in demand in Germany.

$60,000,000 Subsidy For Legit, Opera But German Films Get Nothing

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

West Germany's state and federal governments, quick to subsidize the municipal legit and opera, are dealing the film spots no bonuses. Film expert Max Knapp recently declared that "The German films are the stepchildren of the government's cultural politics," noting that the West German government is currently levying high entertainment taxes on film theatres, which need help while at the same time providing government subsidies up to $3 per seat for every one of the German "live" stages.

Knapp noted that there are outstanding cultural films being made, citing such pictures as Gerhart Hauptmann's "Before Sundown," and noting that this ran for 18 months in Berlin and attracted 745,578 visitors. Had the drama been done on a Berlin stage, for instance, it would have had to run over four years at one of the major city stages. "The Captain from Koepenick," another noted German film, attracted 1,159,922 visitors and would have had to run three years at a government-supported city stage to be presented before that large an audience.

Nonetheless, the German repertory stages now receive support of over $60,000,000 per year, and there is no support in sight for the troubled German film industry, even though it can be a much more important cultural influence in the country.

Last year there were about 450,000,000 tickets sold in German cinemas—and taxes of over $16,000,000 levied on the houses, a hard financial blow for the houses to cope with.

But just as the German government takes money away from the cinemas, it gives that money—and much more — to the stages. The Hamburg Opera, for instance, gets 40.1% of its costs underwritten by the city and state, and every seat in the Bavarian City Opera in Munich received an average $6 in subsistence per year.

Why aid the stages at the expense of the cinemas, when the cinemas can reach so many more people with the same kind of cultural productions, reason the theater experts.

Germany's Cinema Keep Shrinking

Frankfurt.

West Germany's cinema count dipped again in 1963. There are now 6,025 houses. Some 328 closings during the year were offset by only 26 houses opening new or rebuilt. Count at the end of 1962 was 6,307.

In the state of Hesse alone (of which Frankfurt is the chief city), the closings during 1963 numbered about one house per week. (In the first two months of 1964, an addltional seven houses have shuttered). Most were converted into supermarkets or storage warehouses.

In Munich, where 30 houses closed during 1963, the favored reason given was excessive taxes. For every dollar made at the box office, it was noted, 30c went on the average to the distributor, about 60c to various taxes and insurance, and only 10c stayed with the theatre owner.

In Frankfurt, there remained only 66 houses at the end of 1963, down from 83 in 1959.

While in 1948, at the height of the country's depression after the war, each theater seat was 74% occupied, last year it had dropped down to only about 16% utilization.

UFA Houses

ness was down 9.2% in 1962 over the previous year, and the business downtrend in 1963 was only 5.6% over 1962. However, the houses were in the black because they had showed more films of exceptional length for which the ticket prices were raised.

Thus the 1963 turnover for the chain came to $5,055,000, almost the same as the $5,070,000 that it reported in 1962. Because of the higher film rentals that went hand-in-hand with the over-length films shown, the turnover to the distribution firms came to $2,152,000, the report indicated.

The chain also has a 50% arrangement with the ALI newsreel theater chain. And total profits for the year came to $437,500 for the operation or 10% of the turnover, an increase from the 8.6% of the turnover that the UFA theaters could retain in 1962.

TV Says

to show an all-time high of 205 full-length features over Networks One and Two, arousing added ire from the cinema owners who saw this as unequal competition. (The two nets got into a private squabble about who sent the most, or oldest, films — and Second Net claimed its films were an average of only 9.3 years old, while those on First Net were an average 13.4 years old).

Meanwhile, another blow from the Oberhausen Documentary Film Festival — 30 percent of the films shown were bought by the television, and will probably never appear in cinemas.

Synchronizing these, and other foreign films, for the television is another major industry that is helping keep the German film technicians busy, claim the pro-television-crew. At Studio Hamburg alone last year, about 100 full-length features, cultural and documentary shows were synchronized for the second tv Net and the other tv stations. This provided work for German actors as well as for the technicians, and helped aid employment, they note.

German writers are turning toward television as a source for their income, since so few German films are being turned out. And pay has increased since the Second Net came into being a year ago, on April 1, 1963, with two outlets now competing for the talent.

Like to Believe TV Tide Receding

Frankfurt.

The good old days when 70 or 80% of the television set owners were glued to the little screen —or the bad old days as the German cinema owners score it—are just about over in this country. Recent look at who's looking revealed that for some television productions, there were only 5% of the country's 8,500,000 television set owners watching.

While West German exhibitors are exceedingly vexed at the competition from video, they sighed with relief at the recent statistics indicating a film made especially for German television and starring Jose Ferrer, "Delay in Marienborn," attracted only 63% of the viewers, and Chris Howland's "Candid Camera" show, which has not been taken off the channels, brought 61% of the audience in.

However, grim side of the television scene, from the standpoint of the theatre owners, is that the most popular programs on Germany Television Nets One and Two continue to be—old movies. "People, Animals, Sensation" (a circus pic) attracted 68% of the set owners, while "His Best Friend" and "Papa Will Object" got 66% of the sets tuned in. Films are not only a bargain for the German television stations, who can buy them for a tenth of the cost of producing a program or even less, but are the favorites for the viewers as well.

Tout a la Yank, A German Need, But Neglected

Berlin.

"In the light of the film crisis in Germany, publicity work for films has become very difficult in this country," commented Hans Krueger-Franke, chief of Ringpress, the top touter organization. When his organization is trying to plant story or picture material with newspapers or magazines, editors put him or his men often the ironical, discouraging question: "Film?—Is it still alive?"

Krueger-Franke admitted that he is especially interested in working for American companies and the reason is simple: "American producers show more understanding. They have realized the value and importance of publicity and don't argue so much about the costs."

Of course, the Americans don't have those big financial worries. And there is no denying the fact that most German producers are in poor financial shape. Krueger-Franke: "It is also true that they often try to keep down the expenses at the wrong end."

Publicist mentioned the Darryl F. Zanuck film, "The Longest Day," as a particular example of American publicity work. "It was costly but great," he said. It made people curious and led to the impulse: "I must see this film!" There was probably not a single paper which didn't report at least once about "The Longest Day" prior to its premiere. (Ringpress, incidentally, didn't have anything to do with it, so its impartial comment.)

Another admired American publicity campaign was for Stanley Kramer's "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad world" whose international Hollywood junket last November received world-wide coverage.

Changing Ground Rules in Spain: Relate Aid More to Grosses

By HANK WERBA

Madrid.

Spain will officially promulgate a new film law within a matter of weeks. It contains many drastic reforms, some unexpected innovations, and specific objectives.

Primary aim of government law writers is to shed the burden of direct subsidies to film producers and relate state aid to public support for Spanish product at the boxoffice. In a foreword to the first of several drafts, the Director General of Cinema, Garcia Escudero, stated that past protective measures did not achieve a consolidated film industry sufficiently fortified to acquire market leadership at home or market footing abroad.

It is widely accepted in the industry that the majority of filmmakers combined their programs with an eye to the Subsidy Classification Board, rather than to moviegoers. Since the former aid law made it compulsory for Spanish distributors and exhibitors to protect national product, many producers could turn a profit on the strength of a distribution guarantee before filming and an outright subsidy at the end of production, regardless of how the film fared in release.

The new law was elaborately spelled out in a first draft, amply modified in a second on the strength of recommendations from the three Sindicato wings of the industry, and considerably altered in a third and final text now en route from the Director General's office to the Minister of Information and Tourism. It's worth noting that the Director General for Cinema sounded all areas of cinema opinion. After Sindicato recommendations were incorporated, the Director General clocked 39 hours of discussion on the final draft within the State Film Council, augmented to include 20 industry leaders and experts without council seats. In this stage, 64 amendments were accepted out of 112 submitted. There is no precedent in Spanish film annals for such extensive discussion and collaboration in formulating new policy.

Except for specific references to coproductions that exist in film clauses of commercial agreements with other countries, the new law will abrogate all past measures and serve as a complete text on all film laws and procedures. It can still undergo modification before the Minister affixes his signature and the law approved by Franco's Council of State. At the moment, the Minister is embroiled with a far-reaching press law. It is thought that final film approval will suffer delay while Minister Frage Iribarne gives battle to lighten press restrictions.

Medium-Term Credit

The first major chapter in the new law deals with economic aid, and the first major item under this heading, is credit. Medium-term credit will be extended to producers with one or more films in blueprint. Also benefiting, are film studios, dubbing studios, laboratories, distribution companies, and exhibitors. The producers are primary beneficiaries and will receive credit up to 50 per cent of budget. In most instances, a distribution contract for future release is acceptable as guarantee for the loan. In others, two separate bodies—Film Aid Committee and the credit Committee have authority to approve credit requests merely on the strength of the project's commercial possibilities.

The Film Aid Committee will have the Director General for Cinema at its head, and membership drawn from the National Film Institute, Director General's office, the Sindicato, film industry and credit authorities. The Credit Committee will come within the National Film Institute under the presidency of Undersecretary of Information, with all top film authorities, Sindicato chief, and representatives from the Treasury, Economic Development Office, and the Credit Bank as voting members.

Major reform is the method for granting producer subsidies. The law states that the producer will receive as subsidy anywhere from a minimum of 15% to 50% of the boxoffice gross. While the variables are broad, they offer leeway to fix a definite percentage as soon as experience teaches both film authorities and film makers the average gross peseta intake of Spanish films in exhibition. Implementing the subsidy clause is compulsory ticket control at the boxoffice to reveal precision figures for the first time in the industry. Film law writers are prepared to wait for results and then arrive at an average percentage that will afford protection and not provide a miscalculated bonanza. Subsidy percentages will come out of the Film Institute's Aid Fund which draws its annual revenue of approximately 450 million pesetas from dubbing taxes on foreign films, and a special aid tax at the ticket window.

Additional subsidies will be carved out of the fund balance (if any) at the end of the year and go to producers in proportion to the boxoffice business their films chalked up during the course of the year.

Spanish coproducers will be entitled to the full subsidy percentage from gross returns only in coventures with Italy and France, where film pacts accord reciprocal treatment. Also, producers in these countries enjoy similar subsidy percentages and the subsidy clause in the new law merely extends the reciprocity. Spanish coproducers partnering with U.S.A. or Germany, where state aid is nonexistant, will not receive the full subsidy percentage but merely that portion of what they have invested in a co-venture. A 30% Spanish investment in a coproduction with these two countries will bring the Spanish coproducers 30% of the subsidy percentage of boxoffice gross.

The big innovation in subsidy grants is the extension of this protective measure to include exhibitors releasing Spanish productions. Eventually, exhibs will get a small but sufficiently attractive portion of the salle gross out of aid funds to induce showmanship exploitation of native product. This will not go into effect, however, until ticket machines are installed throughout the land and controlled receipts become a matter of industry record. Period of exploitation is set at five years from the date of national release.

Advance Against Subsidy

Since producers cannot wait five years to acquire their subsidy, the law establishes a system of peseta advances to tide things over. Producers will receive an advance of one million pesetas per pic, to be repaid out of subsidy percentage returns over a period of three years. Failure to repay this advance disqualifies film makers from further state aid. The Aid Committee has the authority to refuse an advance if, in its judgment, the release print offers no assurance of commercial returns. This does not disqualify the producer from a subsidy once the questionably commercial product goes out on the screens.

Fully cognizant of the time span required to install ticket counters in close to eight thousand movie houses, the law makers added transitional flexibility to basic intent of speeding new policy into execution. For the balance of the current year, producers may choose between past subsidy procedures and a makeshift estimate of exhib gross based on the boxoffice tax for the protection of minors. Administrated by the Ministry of Justice, this tax offers the only clue to receipts. Starting next year, the law makes it mandatory to install ticket machines (for a legal count) in six major cities currently accounting for half the national ticket window take. These cities are Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Seville, Bilboa, and Zaragoza. At that time, authorities will calculate percentage subsidy from a gross returns in the cities mentioned, as well as an estimated gross count from the tax on minors in other provinces.

For distributors, the law continues to grant the Director General for Cinema the authority to fix a quota of dubbing permits, after getting recommendations from the State Film Council, and Sindicato. In a sweeping change, this chapter of the new film law eliminates the current computation point system (baremo) for the allocation of dubbing licenses, and sets up a simplified code, limited to the number of Spanish films distributed annually, and the annual gross of the Spanish films distributed. The new computation will become effective partially in 1966, and completely in 1967. The current point system remains in effect until the end of the next year. In 1966 the new system takes over, but in that one year, size and total capital of the distributing company will be incorporated in the final point rating to qualify distribs for dubbing licenses.

An incentive quota of dubbing licenses, in one-third excess of the annual quota, becomes available in 1966 to producers and distributors for the release of Spanish pix in foreign markets. Benefiting under this clause, are Spanish films competing in Int'l film festivals. Producers earning incentive licenses will have the right to dispose of them as they see fit.

The protective four-to-one measure requiring distributors to release one Spanish film for every four imported will become extinct in 1966.

Exhibition

The four-to-one-formula passes from the distributors to exhibitors. With the promulgation of the new law, the latter will have their compulsory screen time for Spanish pix increased to a day for every four days of foreign film exhibition. This new formula boosts compulsory screening from 56 days for showcases in Madrid and Barcelona, to 90 days a year. The Director General is authorized to set a quota for compulsory screening of children's programs at such time as a sufficient number of specialized pix become available in the local market.

Films of Special Merit

Films of special merit hold a prominent place. In this category are films with moral, social, or political values; films particularly appropriate for young moviegoers under the age of 14; films unusually offbeat in theme, or artistic in quality, or involving Film Faculty graduates making their debut as directors, cast members, or film technicians; and, finally, films that win main awards in Int'l film festivals.

Films of special merit will receive very special aid. The government will act as guarantor for medium-term credit, and for the peseta advance against percentage subsidy. Furthermore, there will be no penalty for failure to repay the advance. Also, the advance against subsidy can be as high as the total budget—but not exceeding five million pesetas. To foment such quality pix—either favorable to the regime or compelling with Int'l fest juries and adult world audiences, additional aid is contemplated. Films of special merit will have a double point value in the distributor's annual baremo score; for the exhib, it counts for double the compulsory screen time as compared to an ordinary Spanish picture in release.

Finally, a special jury of screen writers and critics will be formed to designate 10% of Spanish pix in exhibition for any given year as films of special merit—automatically bestowing the full complement of economic benefits, if previously overlooked by government special merit classifiers for one reason or another.

Short Features

By law, the government will also subsidize short features and documentaries. The best shorts in this specialized field will qualify for credit, subsidies, and compulsory screen time. Exhib must show one short or documentary for every four days of normal programming.

This, in substance, is the new film law that will govern the Spanish motion picture industry when it is officially promulgated in the near future. For a long time thereafter, the Director General for Cinema will be hard put to spell out detailed procedures for the many fundamental changes, but all of the directives, and people assigned to carry them out, should be functionable by the end of the year, when the new law will become effective in fact.

Bronston Says 'I'll Be Producing Again'; Madrid Echoes 'Amen'

Madrid.

One year ago, Spain was heralded in these columns as the new film empire. Production activity in 1963 amply substantiated glowing predictions. Samuel Bronston produced two mammoth films—"The Fall of the Roman Empire" and "Circus World." The Spanish film industry achieved its highest production mark in history with 113 national and co-partnered features.

At the outset of the new year, the situation took a drastic reversal. Most graphically missing from the scene—at this moment—is the high-powered Bronston activity. For the past four years, the producer assembled a brilliant roster of screen stars, film directors, script writers and technicians in the Spanish capital city where he averaged a blockbuster and a half a year.

The impact of Bronston's continuous production effort is as dramatically reflected by the sudden, sombering silence at his headquarters studio as it was at the giddy height of film-making activity from which emerged "King of Kings," "El Cid," "55 Days At Peking," "The Fall of the Roman Empire" and "Circus World."

On the local front, the 1963 boom deflated fast as Spanish authorities worked on a new film law containing radical changes in state aid policies. After a four-month standstill, production is resuming again—encouraged by government concession offering subsidy aid either under the new or old standards. (See commentary on Spanish production scene and new film law in this section.)

Bronston has emphatically asserted he will resume production this year. Properties once listed for future production include "Brave New World," "Battle of the Bulge," "Nightrunners of Bengal," "Paris—1900." "Blue and Gray on the Nile" and "The French Revolution." Word here is that "Brave New World" will lead off under the direction of Jack Cardiff, when production lights again flash green.

Only other foreign producer with a continuing program is Phil Yordan. In work, is "Crack in the Earth," a sci-fi feature starring Jeanette Scott and Kieron Moore with Andrew Marton directing. Len Sansom and Bernie Glasser are Yordan's Security Pictures producers on "Crack" and upcoming "The White Savage" and "Dear and Glorious Physician"—all slated to roll in Spain this year.

Completing preparation for an early May start is Jean Negulesco's "Pleasure Seekers," produced by David Weisbart for 20th Century-Fox. A Hollywood cast of young stars will travel Spanish locations for a month and then return home for interiors on 20th Fox sound stages.

Ex-Bronston associate producer Alan Brown also has an early May start for his Universal feature, "Miss Jude," set to roll on the Costa Brava with John and Haley Mills under Richard Thorpe's direction.

United Artists will location the British production "The Shabby Tiger" on the Levantine Coast this summer. David Niven stars and Basil Dearden will direct.

Recent location surveys add the possibility of two big productions being scheduled for Spain. One is "The Centurions," for which producer-director Mark Robson has already marked off locations in Southern Spain; the other is "Dr. Zhivago," slated for director David Lean late this year on locations he selected up North.

Jerry Fairbanks Productions starts the first of several Yank-Spanish coproductions next month, when director Daniel Petrie rolls cameras for "The Tom Dooley Story." This joint feature with Tecisa will be filmed entirely in Spain. Some second unit background footage is scheduled for Laos and Viet-Nam.

Mel Ferrer turns exec producer with "El Greco" and will star in the title role. Filming, probably locations only, will begin shortly after Ferrer winds his title role in the current Eurofilms production of "Monsieur La Salle."

The Yank film community has considerably shrivelled in size as compared to last year. And there are no concrete signs that U.S. production in Spain will regain activity levels of recent years in the coming months.

PUBLIC IN SPAIN BUYS MORE DUCATS

Madrid.

Film theatre attendance curve in Spain has manifested a slight but encouraging increase during the past calendar period. The box office setback during 1961 and 1962, largely attributed to the rapid growth of television and large scale installment purchasing of small utility vehicles and motor-scooters, has been upset by a reverted interest in spectacles and quality films.

Heavy ticket window trade engendered by the big ones such as: "How the West Was Won," "Westside Story," "Cleopatra" and "55 Days at Peking" spilled over the success runs of Spain's "La Paloma Street Fair," "From Rose to Yellow," and "Marisol Goes to Rio," the satiric comedy "El Verdugo" and "The Tarantos."

An important novelty factor in upswinging attendance was filmgoer curiosity to view a considerable number of films formerly banned from Spanish screens and released during the past season

SPANISH FEATURES FOR 1964

ADA

Fernando Fernan-Gomez directs and stars in "El Mundo Sigue" (The World Goes On).

AGATA

Producers Antonio Cuevas and Jose Luis Dibildos believe in sizable coproductions following their initial co-venture, "Cyrano y D'Artagnan," starring Jose Ferrer. They last produced the Alain Delon-starrer, "The Black Tulip," and Carlos Saura's "Weep for a Bandit," starring Lea Massari, Francisco Rabal, Serge Reggiani, and Lino Ventura. Both were coproduced with France and Italy. "The Black Tulip" is the first Spanish coproduction to open here in 70m and at advanced prices.

ALBATROS

Cooperative filmmaker called on Jesus Franco to direct a pair of action mystery pix. "Rififi in the City" stars Jean Servais and Fernan-Gomez. In "The Hand of a Dead Man," Howard Vernon, Paula Martel and Hugo Blanco are top-billed.

ALESANCO FILMS

European-based Yank actor Frank Latimore heads the cast of "Cerco de Muerte" (Stagecoach Passenger). A western directed by Jose Elorrieta.

ALFYEGA

"Juego de Hombres" (Game for Men), is a modern drama directed by Jose Luis Gamboa with a cast including Pedro Sanchez, Roberto Camardiel, and Loura Granados.

ARGOS

"Bueno para Nada" (Good for Nothing). Coproduction with Italy directed by Walter Santesso who also stars with Nuria Torray and Antonio Prieto.

ARO

"Confidencias de un Marido" (Third Floor Left) Spanish set constructor-turned-director, Francisco Prosper, makes his debut as director with this light comedy. The cast is headed by Lopez Vasquez and Amparo Soler Leal.

ARTURO GONZALEZ

"Las Hijas de Elena" (Helen's Daughters). A farce comedy directed by Mariano Ozores with cast headed by Isabel Barces, Antonio Ozores, Laura Valenzuela, and Lopez Vazquez. The producer's second film last year, "El Diablo tambien Llora" (The Devil also Weeps), is a more ambitious entry that earned the Spanish Oscar for Nieves Conde as best director of the year. Strong cast of this coproduction with Italy stars Francisco Rabal, Eleonora Rossi-Drago, Alberto Closas, and Mabel Karr.

"Piedra de Toque" (Touchstone) was named one of the two Spanish Oscar winners for its tale of colonial life in Spanish New Guinea. Yank actor William Marshall stars under the direction of Julio Buchs with Arturo Fernandez, Susana Campos, and Angela Bravo.

ATECA

"Eva 63." A modern comedy directed by Pedro Lazaga and stars Laura Valenzuela, Elisa Montes, and Jorge Rigaud.

ATENEA

"Los Invencibles" (Invincibles). A 50-50 coproduction with Italy directed by Alberto de Martino. Stars Tony Russell, Helga Line and Gerard Tichy.

ATLANTIDA

Coop comedy, "Hot Summer for Sr. Rodriguez," stars funster Lopez Vazquez under Pedro Lazaga's direction.

BALCAZAR

Francisco Balcazar had an active production slate last year turning out three Spanish films and two in coproduction. Young director, Perez-Dolz helmed "A Tiro Limpio" (Clean Shot), starring Jose Suarez, Luis Pena, and Maria Asquerino. "La Revoltosa" is a screen adaption of a popular light opera. "Piso de Soltero" (Bachelor Apartment) is a comedy directed by Francisco's brother, Alfonso Balcazar and stars Alberto Closas, Cassen, Irene Daina, Maria Anderson. "Un Balcon sobre el Infierno" (Hell's Precipice): Young French director Francois Villiers directed this modern drama with a strong cast headed by Michele Morgan, Simon Andreu, and Dany Saval. "Noches de Casablanca" (Espionage in Casablanca) is a melo musical coproduction with Italy and France. Int'l cast includes Sarita Montiel, Maurice Ronet, Franco Fabrizzi, and Leo Anchoriz. Gallic Henry Decoin directed.

BOSCO

"El Camino" (The Way Ahead) is a sweet and light social drama directed by and starring Ana Mariscal. Others in the cast are non-pros.

BIG-4

"El Llanero" (The Plainsman). A tale of the open spaces in Venezuela directed by Jesus Franco and starring Jose Suarez, Silvia Llorente, and Todd Martin.

BUCH-SANJUAN

Roman Gubern marks his debut as film director with "Brillante Porvenir" (Bright Future), a dramatic story of modern Spanish youth, produced in Barcelona with German Cobos and Serena Vergano at the top of the cast. "El Proximo Otono" (Next Autumn) is also a first assignment for director Antonio Ezeiza. Stars are Sonia Bruno and Manuel Manzaneque.

CARABELA

All-European cast, including Annie Giradot, Richard Johnson, Alida Valli, and Jose Menendez, appear in "La Otra Mujer" (The Other Woman), an ambitious coproduction with Italy and France directed by Francois Villiers.

CARTHAGO

Coop western directed by Leon Klimovsky. Jack Taylor is the skilled mount-up, aided by Jorge Martin and Junt Brunell.

CASTILLA

Mystery drama "Pact of Silence" comes in as a coop venture under the direction of Antonio Roman, with a cast headed by Yvonne Bastien, Pierre Brice, and Carlos Estrada.

CENTAURO

"Taste of Vengence" is a western coproduced with Italy. Yank actor Richard Harrison tops the cast.

CESAREO GONZALEZ

Veteran film maker Cesareo Gonzalez was the busiest producer last year with one Spanish pic and six coproductions to his credit. "Blackmailing a Bullfighter" stars El Cordobes, hottest matador in the arena today. "Summer Cruise" is loaded with Sun Coast paysage, and a big cast starring Carmen Sevilla and Gabriel Farzetti under the direction of Luis Lucia. Lola Flores stars in "De Color Moreno" (Latin Complexion), filmed entirely in Mexico as a coproduction. "Tony's Secret" is a custom-made entry for young Spanish singer Joselito. "Nunca pasa Nada" was one of the pix representing Spain at the last year's Venice Film Festival. Juan Antonio Bardem is the director; Corinne Marchand is the star, ably assisted by a talented Spanish cast. Big grosser on the Gonzalez list to be released this Fall is the Sarita Montiel-starrer, "Samba," a coproduction with Brazil, where director Rafael Gil filmed exteriors.

CHAMARTIN

Coproduced "An Almost Serious Gal" with Germany and the modern comedy stars Lilo Pulver, Alberto de Mendoza, comic Gila, and Juanjo Menendez under the direction of veteran Ladislao Vajda.

COPERCINES

Film chief Eduardo Manzanos set the pace last year in mass producing westerns. His two coop companies, Copercines and Fenix, turned out six—all coproduced with Italy. Ty Hardin directed and starred in "Boudine," newcomer Jose Luis Borau helmed "Brandy," Agustin Navarro took the reins for "Four Bullets" and Italy's Stefani Vencini directed Walter Chiari, Aurora Sarasa anc Silvia Solar in "Western Heroes" under the Fenix banner. Copercines westerns included "The Californian's Revenge" and the Geoffrey Horne-starrer "Three Good Men."

DELFIN

"Bridge of Time" stars German Cobos, Susana Canales, Maria Mahor, and Delfin coop topper, Julio Pena.

ECO

Miguel Picazo has a solid first credit as director with "Aunt Tula," a dramatic tale of provincial life from the novel by Miguel Unamuno. Stars Aurora Bautista and Carlos Estrada.

E.C.A.

Jose Luis Font debuts as a director with "Vida de Familia" (Family Life), using a cast of legit stars.

EPOCA

"Girl in Clover" is a coproduction with Italy built around Rocio Durcal, Spain's popular young songstress.

ESAMER

Coproduced two last year with Yank filmmaker Sidney Pink. First came "Pyro" with Barry Sullivan and Martha Hyer. Second was the comedy spoof at Castro, "Operation Delilah," with Rory Calhoun and Gia Scala.

ESTE

Barcelona production banner has three for release — "The Skirt Chaser," with comic Cassen, Paloma Valdes and Milo Quesada; "The World at Night," an assortment of variety numbers on film and a coproduction with Italy modestly called, "World's Superspectacles," a coproduced potpourri of circus acts and ballet.

ESTELA

Brett Halsey, Gianna Maria Canale and Conrado Sanmartin star in "Bridge of Sighs," a Spanish-Italian coproduction.

EUROFILMS

"Frontier of God" is a modern religioso drama directed by Cesar Ardavin and starring Enrique Avila.

GUION

Marisol-starring vehicles have a ready return in the Spanish lingual market. The young singer-dancer starred in two last year for producer Manuel Goyanes. "Marisol Goes to Rio" was followed by a more ambitious project, "The New Cinderella," also starring Hollywood's Bob Conrad and Flamenco star Antonio under the direction of George Sherman.

HESPERIA

Coproduced "Game of Truth" with France. Madeleine Robinson and Sami Frey top the cast. Co-stars Maria Asquerino and Jose Bodalo. Director is Jose Maria Forque.

HISPAMER

Active through the year, Sergio Newman prefers the three-way coproduction with Italy and France. In this vein, he partnered in the Brett Halsey starrer, "The Magnificent Adventurer," the terror-laden "Curse of Karnstein," the four-segment "Four Truths" and "Horsemen of Terror."

I.F.I.

Producer Iquino assigned Miguel Lluch to direct "Crime" and "Girl Hitchhiker" and called on young director Mario Camus to helm "Farceurs" and "Young Sanchez." Latter was Spain's selection for Buenos Aires Film Festival and Film Week in Valladolid.

IMPALA

Debuter Manuel Summers reaped a glowing success with "From Rose ... to Yellow" so Impala assigned him to "Girl in Mourning," Spanish entry at Cannes this year.

INTERNATIONAL FILMS

Coproduced "The Wedding" with Argentina. Male stars Jose Suarez, Jose Guardiola and Jose Rubio are Spanish; Argentina's Garciela Borges and Susana Campos are femme leads. Lucas Demare directed.

IZARO

"Summer Sun" was filmed on the Costa Brava with Arturo Fernandez and Luz Marquez heading the cast.

LUVI

Veteran Rafael Salvia directed "Her Name Was Dulcinea" with a cast starring Susana Campos, Juanjo Menendez and Ramsay Ames. Second project was a coproduction with Puerto Rico called "Verdict for an Angel," directed by Ferrerico Curiel.

NAGA

Paul Kohner packaged Naga's coproduction with U.S.A. "Strangers Came to Die," starring Katy Jurado, Robert Brown, Alberto Blosas and Conrado San Martin under the direction of Harald Philips. "El Verdugo" (The Garroter) was official entry at Venice last year. Ably directed by Luis Berlanga the black-tinted comedy stars Nino Manfredi, Emma Penella and Jose Isbert.

OCEAN

Opened shop with a slate of two big coproductions and added a Spanish film to round out calendar year. "Sandokan," has action and adventure. Stars Steve Reeves and Genevieve Grad. "Pariahs of Glory" also teamed Ocean with Italy and France for filming in Barcelona and on the Costa Brava. Cast was topped by Curt Jurgens, Maurice Ronet, Falco Lulli and German Cobos under Henry Decoin's direction. Ocean chief Jamie Comas rounded out first year with "Matador in Street Clothes," a low-budgeter helmed by Jorge Grau. As Productions co-financed.

PEDRO MASO

Fernando Palacios directed "Operation Embassy," an Alberto Closas comedy co-starring Analia Gade and Lopez Vazquez.

BENITO PEROJO

Perojo's commercial flair has become a byword in Spain. He scored with Sean Flynn in "Captain Intrepid," a three-way coproduction and followed up with two big Spanish hits— "La Paloma Street Fair," adapted from a light opera classic by Saenz de Heredia, and a first film for the Pili and Mili twins "Like Two Drops of Water"—a comedy musical heavily exploited in the local market.

PROCINSA

Another new banner started life with a coproduction — "The Cruel King." Ferdinando Baldi directed a cast topped by Yank actor Mark Damon and Argentine Carlos Estrada.

PROCUSA

Policy here is coproduction only. Teamed with Germany for the "Black Spider," starring O. W. Fisher and Karin Dor and directed by F. Gottlieb. "El Ataco" (Holdup) brought in Italy and Germany with a mixed cast headed by Barbara Steele, Christiana Doermer and Dino Mele. "Boy Wanted," is Antonio Mercero's first try as director.

M.D. PRODUCTIONS

Had good box-office results locally with "The Scandal." Espartaco Santoni produced and starred with Mara Cruz, Lorena Valazquez and Luis Davila.

TARFE

"Llegar a Mas" (Reach Higher) added Jesus Santos to film director ranks and increased growing roster of young filmmakers.

TECISA

Producer Jose Maesso teamed with veteran Lester Welch to coproduce "Gunfighters of Casa Grande" for M-G-M release. Western was entirely filmed in Spain by Roy Rowland with a cast starring Alex Nichols, Jorge Mistral, Mercedes Alonso and Steve Rowland. Maesso coproduced two others—"Gringo" and "Straits Mission."

TEIDE PRODUCTIONS

Producer-director Jose Maria Forn adapted last year's legit hit, "Empty Fishing Boat" for the screen.

TIBIDABO

Another newcomer, Jaime Camino, directed "Los Felices 60" (Happy Sixties) with a cast led by German Cobos, Yelena Samarina, Juan Capri and Daniel Martin.

VERTICE

"Donde tu Estes" (Blind Man's Bluff) is a coproduction with Italy and France. Maurice Ronet stars with Claudi Mori, Amadeo Nazzari, Angel Aranda and Katia Loritz. Director is German Lorente.

WALKYRIA

"La Cesta" (The Basket) is a coop comedy musical starring Ana Esmeralda, Antonio Garisa, and Perla Cristal under the direction of Rafael Salvia.

Actors 'Orphaned'; Outside Spanish Workers' Laws

By HANK WERBA

Madrid.

The actor in the Spanish film industry is in a class by himself but he would gladly exchange the privilege for legal labor status. Standard contract with producers clearly establishes the actor's duties and obligations. He gets a role to play, a fixed amount of pesetas for performances, he lives by a shooting schedule, he must qualify as a professional, he must be available for call at all times during filming, he must accept orders from the director, and he must go before cameras punctually and fully prepared.

Despite this partial list of pre-established conditions for rendering services, the actor receives no protection under Spanish labor laws. All others in the industry have fixed status—including the director who orders the performer around throughout the course of film production.

Confusion regarding this state of affairs was, for a long time, administrative and bureaucratic. Under the film law of 1948, the actor was placed in a category of his own. A year later the Director General of Labor wrote off this clause with a sweep of the pen. It was not until John Derek found himself replaced by Rory Calhoun in the "Colossus of Rhodes" and sued his co-producers that it was finally determined a director general lacked authority to abolish a state-approved law.

Derek won relief before two labor tribunals but lost the producers final appeal to a supreme court in 1960.

Further administrative attempts in recent years to qualify the actor under the rights of labor were again frustrated late last year by the supreme court.

In a study published recently by film attorney Vizcaino Casas, reference is made to the most expert findings among European top film advocates in questioning the justice of the high court's ruling. According to the Spanish legalite, few actors will attempt a civil suit. Legal costs are prohibitive and crowded court calendars inflict interminable delays. Action is speedier in the labor tribunals, where the actor can seek redress for free.

In commenting on the latest verdict, Vizcaino Casas thought the judges were unduly influenced by the literature and publicity about Hollywood film stars who give the impression of having achieved independent power and considerable victories in their legal battles with producers. Unfortunately, he pointed out, this is not true in Spain, where the supreme court ruling covers not only the Spanish film star, but all the other support actors down to and including bit players.

Latest Catholic Score On Upcoming Product

National Legion of Decency has condemned two imports, the French "Mistress For The Summer" and the Italian "Of Wayward Love" and has given a B classification to Metro's English-made "Of Human Bondage." The Landau Co.'s British "The Servant," classified as A, Section IV, was described as "a cinematically brilliant examination of the corrupting power of an evil character . . . requires certain reservations; its portrait of human corruptibility may be overdrawn, and for some its treatment would be occasionally shocking."

Objections to "Bondage," which stars Kim Novak and Laurence Harvey, was that film "tends to compensate for weakness in credible character motivation by exaggerating sensational aspects of story development."

General objections to "Mistress," an American Film Distributors release, and "Wayward Love," a Pathe release, were their "blatant sexual misbehavior, gross suggestiveness, marital infidelity, seduction and illicit sex."

On plus side are Metro's "Rhino" (A); Universal's "Bullet for a Badman" (A-II); AIP's "Torpedo Bay" (A-III).

Spaniards Hurt By Italo Blackball Of Market Wish

Madrid, April 28.

Deteriorating film relations between Italy and Spain are clouding the horizon for film makers in both countries. May even upset existing distribution accords and extra-curricular film activities.

Reason for the film tangle is attributed to Italy's rejection earlier this year of Spain's bid to enter the Common Market. Spain now appears to be re-appraising its entire commercial alliance with Italy, prepared to make modifications an unfriendly climate imposes.

Though film authorities carefully avoid official talk, they have not hesitated unofficially to predict a creeping breakdown in joint film-making.

Trade circles go further in assessing the situation. Present estimates, sources say, list 30 to 40 coproduction deals pending final government approval. Of these, not more than 25% are expected to survive rigid examination of contract terms and delays.

Some Spanish producers have turned to France and Germany for film partners after recent trips to Italy where, they say, authorities are also looking at coproduction agreements with letter-of-the-law magnifiers that water down past economy savings of extended location shooting in Castile and minimum sound stage filming in Rome.

Other sources believe Spain might well ask for substantial revision of the agreement now governing all phases of film activity between the two countries, when the pact commission meets next fall. Revision would not only set stern limits on co-ventures but would also reduce Italian imports for local distribs, and make more import and dubbing licenses available to friendly film nations.

Concrete expression of strained situation will come soon if, as reliable reports predict, Spain turns down the Venice Film Festival invite. One producer recently asked Spanish festival selectors to earmark his entry for Venice, only to be told unofficially that participation looks doubtful.

Last year, Spain coproduced 21 features with Italy and partnered with Italy and France in 17 three-way pix.

Spanish Public

with approval from a less-rigid censor board. Fan favorites included three Billy Wilder pics—"Some Like It Hot," "The Apartment," and "The Seven Year Itch." Others showing boxoffice strength were "Peyton Place," "Suzie Wong" and "Sweet Bird of Youth."

Of the spectaculars, "How the West Was Won" and "Westside Story" remained on the big screens for over a year of premiere run. "Cleopatra" is continuing in its seventh month, and "55 Days at Peking" is still a major grosser.

The increasing popularity of giant screen films, the continued public support of quality Spanish film entertainment, and the newly developed interest in Spain's younger generation of film-makers add up to a heartening hypo for movie exhibitors who have watched the exploitation screen deteriorate under the initial impact of television and weekend motoring without recourse to tax remedies and ticket scale increases that have helped ameliorate attendance decline in other countries.

Optimistic resutls, however, indicate greater audience selectivity. The movie-going habit, once a dependable factor in filling salles around the country, no longer exists on any appreciable scale. Filmgoers will line up for productions unavailable to small screens, but the average entry is no longer an automatic draw for entertainment-minded Spaniards. But, as long as exhibitors can continue to present the blockbusters, quality office bid fare, adult themes, and highly-touted native pics, the movie graphs will continue to show progress curves.

BUREAUCRATS SUPREME IN DENMARK: THEY PROFIT ON ALL FILM LOSSES

By J. R. KEITH KELLER

Copenhagen.

The film situation in Denmark today is "tragic." Studios lie dark and vacant. In front of one of the biggest, Johan Jacobsen's Flamingo, sits a For Sale sign. Several theatres are closing down for good. Henning Karmark's decision to suspend production at his Asa Studios, the country's second biggest, has worked as a kind of button for general panic. At the moment, the industry is certainly sick.

And it could all be cured, film industry leaders claim, if only the Danish Government would suspend the crippling amusement tax. But the government is dragging its feet on the issue. The government gets its amusement tax on all films whether they show a profit or not, and to be on the safe side the government collects directly at the boxoffice.

Following Karmark in the immediate future are such film makers as Johan Jacobsen who intends to make films for other countries and Bent Christensen who will throw in the towel as a producer to concentrate again on directing films for Germany's Danish film king, Preben Philipsen.

Bent Christensen, one of the most daring and progressive of young Danish film makers, has a sad but typical story to tell. It is the story about his latest film, the avant-garde, Henning Carlsen-directed "How About Us?":

Estimated cost of the picture is 450 000 Kroner. This is the average cost of a black-and-white, non-spectacular Danish feature film. From a bank the producer obtained a first priority loan of 200,000 Kroner. A second priority loan is obtained from the Ankerstjerne Copying and Cutting Laboratory. This loan is of 75,000 Kroner and corresponds to what the laboratory would be paid by the producer for its work anyway. The remaining 175,000 is added by the producer, the director and a private angel who enter the deal on a one-for-all-and-all-for-one agreement. They will not be paid back till after the bank and the laboratory are paid back with interest.

The Only Winner

"How About Us?" was released but never really made it at the boxoffice. Its net rentals share a half after its release is, in Denmark, about 150,000 Kroner. The producer is then 125,000 Kroner short in being able to meet the priority claims. The director is already personally in the red because his worldwide critical hit, "Dilemma," has not paid back its costs yet. The producer has a few rights on previous films that he can sell to get some immediate cash, but the "angel" is the one who will really have to foot the bill. He is Preben Philipsen and he can afford it although it naturally does not encourage him to further risks in Denmark. But Christensen and Carlsen are, at present, through as active film makers.

But state and local taxes amounting to 140 000 Kroner have already been paid without state or local governments having risked one cent or without even having moved a finger to collect. The money is handed over every night by the theatre managers.

The amusement tax is an old institution in Denmark, but in the big days of Danish films before, during and immediately after World War II, the film makers paid it though always with much protest—because they could afford it. Today they cannot. Of the latest 20 Danish feature films, only six are expected to come out in the black or just to come out even.

Self-Favoring Goot

Danish film makers lost an estimated five million Kroner on the 20 films released during 1963. The Government, nevertheless, collected a little over six million Kroner on the same films. This makes the situation not only tragic but downright grotesque.

Items from last year's crop of Danish films:

"The Dear Family" from Nordisk Film. Production cost. Kr. 1,328,572. Deficit: 290 500 Kroner. The Government's take: 303,394 Kroner. (This film may make more money later when foreign rents are paid).

"South of Tana River" from Asa. Cost: 1,000,000 Kroner. Deficit: 450,000 Kroner. The Government's take: 168,000 Kroner.

"Miss Nitouche" (Saga Studio) is out ahead with a cost of 1,575,000 Kroner, a profit of 525,000 Kroner and 599,000 for the Government.

"The Girl and the Press Photographer" (Merry) made a profit.

"The Crazy Paradise" of Palladum did, too. Profitable films feature Denmark's beloved comedian Dirch Passer. "The Duel" by Knud Leif Thomsen (Nordisk) made 91,066 Kroner while it gave 114,500 Kroner to the Kingdom after an initial cost of 598,401 Kroner.

A case in point when it comes to whether the Government's severe tax claims are reasonable or not is "The Word" by world-renowned director Carl Th. Dreyer This film was first shown in 1955. Its production costs were 669,000 Kroner. In the film's Danish account books "The Word" today still shows a deficit of 200,000 Kroner while the Kingdom has collected a healthy 450,000 Kroner. Money made by international sale of the film is not considered here. The most important thing remains that the Government claims its tax money before any money at all is made for the producer, and that any investment is taxed regardless of loss or gain for the investor.

Poul Hansen, minister of finance, recently stated that he "would like to see the amusement tax suspended." So have other government leaders for the last six years. This is an election year in Denmark, and nobody seriously believes that a relatively minor matter like the amusement tax will be tackeld by the Folketinget till after the election this summer.

All told, the Government collects only 34 million Kroner in amusement tax per annum, and of these the 30 million are paid by the film makers. If the film makers were allowed to pay their taxes after and not before they make any money, they would most likely be able to pay much more to the Governments. However, local governments that collect about half the amusement tax, are less ready to give up a safe buck today even with the prospect of making two bucks tomorrow. How shortsighted they are, is aptly proved by the number of film theatres that have recently closed down. (See separate story).

The number of tickets sold in the Kingdom of Denmark is steadily declining. In 1958 48.7 million tickets were sold, in 1962 38.5 million, in 1963 34.5 million. The Danish films are the hardest hit. American spectaculars and international avant-garde films still make money here. As expressed by Jörgen Nielsen, manager of Copenhagen's 1521 seats Imperial Bio: the audience want either the really awe-inspiring show or they want artistic truth. If a filmgoer must be cheated, it must be in a big way, if he must be thrilled, it must be The Big Thrill.

SVENSK PARTY'S VISIT TO SOVIET WORKERS

Stockholm.

Svensk Filmindustri's director Vilgot Sjoman, cameraman Gunnar Fischer and export manager K. H. Lindqvist, with Volger Jonsson Sovexportfilm rep here, flew to Moscow recently as guests of the Soviet Film Workers' Union. They took four Swedish features —Ingmar Bergman's "Smiles of a Summer Night" and "Throug'. A Glass Darkly" and Hans Abramson's "Dream of Happiness" and "Alskarinnan" (released in the U.S. as "The Swedish Mistress"). The films were screened for the Soviets last week at Moscow's Dom Kino (Cinema Palace). A few Swedish short subjects were also shown.

There have been many recent attempts to increase Soviet import of Swedish films but few have interested the Russians so far. Most recent sale was "The Wonderful Adventures of Nils."

It is unique for a single Swedish company to be given such a chance to visit Moscow to present a part of its production. However, it is not the first time SF delegates have visited Moscow for studies. Last year, SFWU invited cameraman Sven Nykvist and costumer Max Goldstein to study Soviet color film processes

Dreyer's Unused Genius Lamented

Why Has No Foundation Responded to the Challenge Of Denmark's Master-Director—Greater Than Bergman Of Sweden But Long Without Financing?

By HENRY HART

(The appreciation which follows is by the Editor of Films In Review, the monthly organ of the National Board of Review, founded in 1909, the oldest surviving body of private enthusiasts for the cinema in the American nation.—Ed)

Western civilization has allowed one of its most sentient artists to be inactive for the greater portion of his greatest maturity. I refer to Carl Theodore Dreyer, who, I deeply believe, is the greatest of living motion picture directors.

He was 75 on Feb. 3 last, and there was some observance of the day in his native Denmark, but elsewhere—nothing. Our culture is indeed poorer because of our neglect of so fine an artist. The pictures he might have made would have enriched all who saw them, and become as integral a part of our cultural heritage as da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," Shakespeare's Lear, Beethoven's "Fifth," and Einstein's $M=EC^2$.

How is it possible for so great an artist to have been so impotent? I do not know enough of Dreyer's psyche to answer, nor enough of Danish economics. Whatever the reasons, human life has been the loser.

It is shameful that Dreyer has not been supported by the public, but even more shameful that he has not been the recipient of one of the private or governmental grants-in-aid which have gone to so many who are so totally unworthy. Compared to Dreyer, whom he sometimes imitates, Ingmar Bergman is a lazy and corrupt adventurer. For Dreyer possesses the artistic sine qua non: integrity.

Dreyer is best known in the United States for his second best picture: "The Passion of Joan of Arc" ('27). I do not wish to detract from the very exceptional achievement by exalting "Day of Wrath" ('44) above it. Both belong among the greatest films of all time. But to me "Day of Wrath" is a more unified, and profound, artistic entity.

It has been almost a decade since Dreyer's last film ("Ordet" '55). Because that picture contains a scene representing the resurrection of the dead it has been brushed aside by the critics in all countries, including those who usually defend any content on the ground that the art which surrounds it is paramount. Art is omnipotent in "Ordet."

For a decade Dreyer has been trying to raise money for a film about Christ's life that would exempt the Jews from responsibility for His crucifixion. But not even the Jews, or Israel, have enabled him to make it. Nor has anyone else. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments," Bronston's "King of Kings," Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told," DeLaurentiis' "The Bible"—but not Dreyer's "Life of Christ."

The reason, I regret to say, is that producers in all countries fear Dreyer's artistic integrity constitutes too great a commercial hazard.

The Ford Foundation could fulfill one of the purposes for which it was created by helping Dreyer before it is too late.

Favoring Own TV, Government Of Finland Nearly Rubs Out Native Theatrical Film Trade

By FREDERIC FLEISHER

Helsinki.

Cinema attendance in Finland has dropped by an estimated 54% since 1958. The decrease was about 24% in 1962 and 29% during 1963. At present there are some 525 film theatres in the country. Last year 55 closed up and 14 closed during the first two months of 1964. Before the end of 1964 the total shutterings may hit 100.

The main reason for the drop in attendance is the growth of television. The government-regulated video networks in the Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway and Sweden normally transmit one feature each week whereas the Finnish government tv transmitted 135 features during 1963. It transmitted 1,372 hours of programs, theatrical product used up 198 hours and 47 minutes of the time. Add 1,370 documentaries and other shorts representing 280 hours of air time. All in all, filmed material took up 566 hours and 41 minutes of the total Finnish television.

More than a year ago Finland's actors banded together to demand that they get a money share of the sale of Finnish features going to Finnish tv. During the dispute following no Finnish theatrical features have been made with a professional cast. The handful of documentary-type features that have been made have failed at the box offices.

The nub of the dramatic performers' demands came clear late last spring when Suomen Filmiteollisuus Oy, Finland's last producer, unloaded 222 features, which represented a nearly total sellout of backlog to Yleisradio, the government tv. This transaction alone made Yleisradio the owner of more than half of the Finnish features ever made.

Belatedly the government of Finland realizes that measures must be taken to save the film industry it helped cripple. Seeking a rapid cure, the government has introduced a plan that calls for a drastic tax-cut on tickets and slapping a tremendous tax on films shown on television.

Elastic 'Tax'

At present tickets are taxed in relation to whether the authorities regard a film as good or bad, whether it is made in Finland or imported. Only educational, scientific and certain children's films are not taxed.

In theory a 10% tax should be added to tickets to a Finnish film. In practice if the film is morally, artistically and technically sufficiently good the tax is cancelled. recent years most Finnish films have been considered to fulfill these requirements.

A tax of 15, 30 or 50% is added to tickets to foreign films — 50% on gangster films and but 15% on those that have anti-war themes. If a feature is preceded by a short that fulfills certain requirements the entrance tax is reduced by 5%. A so-called "theatre reduction" of 5 to 10% is also available.

To stimulate the film industry the Finnish government plans to reduce the taxes but it does not want to abolish them. For one thing government officials claim that taxes can exert "a desirable influence" on quality films.

There will be a 10% tax on tickets to most films, while a 20% tax will be added to tickets to films that are considered morally and artistically "inferior."

At the same time the government has proposed that Finnish tv should pay a tax of approximately $30 a minutes on all films that belong to the 10% tax category and $60 a minute on films in the 20% tax group. Films made by the Finnish tv would go tax free.

Television administrators have protested the proposed plans. They claim that they normally pay $900 to the distributor to show a 1½ hour feature. The proposed plan would compel them to pay either $2,700 or $5,000 "rental" equivalent.

Hang Crepe On Danes' Cinema

Copenhagen.

Of the foreign film companies with offices in Denmark only Columbia Pictures emerges relatively unshaken from a winter season that is the bleakest in the history of Danish film theatres. Columbia features such as "Lawrence of Arabia" and "The Victors" have been steady moneymakers while "The Cardinal" took an awful beating. United Artists made up for other losses with such hits as "Tom Jones" and "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World."

While Denmark has been cruelly neglected in the American film companies' public relation work, the two named companies have made a good effort to better this situation. Especially Columbia has worked several smooth arrangements such as getting the Danish king to his first film premiere and having aging Harold Lloyd repeat one of the stunts of his youth on top of a Copenhagen sky-scraper. Immediate box office results have been seen, because while Denmark is a very suspicious country where pressagentry is concerned, the Danes appreciate the unusual when it is done with taste and humor.

Nevertheless, ten out of the 49 film theatres in Copenhagen and surrounding suburbs have shown a deficit during 1963, and six theatres in the same area are expected to disappear during 1964. The six: Bergthora, 418 seats, Scala Bio, a downtown theatre with 548 seats, Hvidovre Kino, 477 seats, Valby Theatre, 468 seats, Skovshoved Bio, 467 seats, and the modern Villabyernes Bio, 774 seats. The five first of these theatres close down due to new housing developments or the building of new roads, but none of them are expected to re-open. This is not because they are not needed. They are needed, and the closing-down of for instance Hvidovre Bio leaves a suburb of 45,000 inhabitants without any film theatre. But the general film situation in Denmark at present encourages no one to plan new theatres even if—says Flemming John Olsen of Saga Productions—"new modern and comfortable theatres are one of the musts if audiences are again to be lured away from the TV screens."

Sweden's Count for March

Stockholm.

A total of 28 films opened at Stockholm's first run cinemas during March. USA topped the list with 13 films, with five from Britain and four French imports. Two came from Italy and one was Swedish, the latter the psycho-sexualis "491" (SF). In addition there were one each from Austria, Finland and Greece.

No films were banned by the State Censorship Board during March.

Sweden's Films 'Schein' With Confidence

Government Adopts Helpful Policy—Optimism Rises and More Features in Works—Yank Share-of-Swedish-Screen Time Diminishes as Young Generation Loses Its Admiration for Uncle Sam As World War II Winner and Democracy Exponent

By FREDERIC FLEISHER

Stockholm.

The Swedish film industry is the envy of all in northern Europe. The reason is the Harry Schein plan, discussed at some length in VARIETY's International Film Edition for 1963. It went into effect on July 1, 1963. The Schein plan proposed reducing the entertainment tax on theatre tickets from 25% to 10%. Furthermore, the remaining 10% was to be used to stimulate the industry to make quality films and pay for the education and training of young talent and support numerous measures to stimulate the interest in quality films in Sweden and Swedish films abroad.

The distribution of the 10% funds is handled by the Swedish Films Institute whose first president is Schein himself though he is rumored wanting to give up the position. As in previous cases, Schein specializes in setting up projects but once going he prefers turning the job of administration to others.

The Schein plan and the Swedish Film Institute has injected the film industry and its talent with greater enthusiasm and confidence than at any time since the end of World War II. The direct result is that companies are daring to make more, experiment more and give opportunities to newcomers. In fact the film industry is sincerely searching for talent.

The audience, however, has continued to shrink. Ticket sales in the Kingdom of Sweden dropped by more than 10%, in many areas. Audiences have become increasingly divided into two separate groups:

(1) Straight commercial product'

(2) Offbeat or art stuff

This, of course, parallels the developments in such widely scattered lands as the United States and Australia, though the "New Wave" of some years ago in France has receded. Italy, of course, has always been aggressively commercial alongside its avant-garde efforts.

See Drop Ending

Officials here believe, however, that the drop attendance will probably soon reach its low point and possibly even rise slightly. The initial explanation was, naturally, television, here, too, the great enemy. Swedish showmen are no longer trying to battle video but are trying to cooperate, to adapt the film industry to conditions created by tv and move into fields that are less suited to tv.

Film goers are largely between 15 and 25 years old. They turn to the cinema because they do not have a home of their own or do and want to get away from it or be with a girl without having family around.

When Swedish film industryites speak of cooperation with Swedish tv they mean that they allow short sequences of films to be shown on special tv programs that discuss new films. The tv programs that deal with current films place a strong emphasis on quality films from any nation and quality Swedish productions.

Own 'Festival'

Another government subsidized measure to stimulate interest in quality films will be started in the autumn. The Film Institute will select seven films that will form a so-called "festival" that will play a week in some 30 Swedish cities. Theatre owners will be guaranteed a certain income if ticket sales are insufficient. The idea is to provide people with an opportunity to see films that would not normally be available to them.

One of the film industry's greatest competitors in recent years has been live plays acted by Swedish actors and actresses that were transmitted about once a week. As the Swedish Theatrical Union went on strike on Nov. 30, 1963, dramatic performers have not appeared on tv since that date.

Sweden's most discussed and most seen films have been Ingmar Bergman's "The Silence" and Vilgot Sjoman's "491." Lurid publicity played an important part in selling 1,500,000 tickets to Sweden's 7,500,000 population within two months. "491" was first banned by the censors. Debated almost daily in newspapers throughout the country it was released after one minute and 24 seconds of film (38 meters) were removed.

Bergman's next film "All These Women" is scheduled to open during the Stockholm Festival in June. During the summer Bergman is planning to shoot one of the 10 episodes in "Stimulantia."

Another anthology planned by Svensk Filmindustri is taking shape under the title of "4 x 4." The subject is the four seasons of the year; each of them will be made by a film maker from one of the Nordic countries. Rolf Clemens, a Norwegian and formerly an assistant to Alain Resnais, will handle spring. Summer will be handled by the Danish "Weekend" team Palle Kjaerulff-Schmidt and Klaus Rifbjerg. The young Swede Jan Troell will portray autumn in an episode that will star Max von Sydow, while winter will be described by Maunu Kurkvaara, the talented Finn.

Other Projects

The coming year will also mark the return of Alf Sjoberg and Arne Sucksdorff. The latter received $20,000 from the Swedish Film Institute to help him and Svensk Filmindustri pay for the rest of his film that is set in Rio de Janeiro. Ingmar Bergman's film plans are the short episode in "Stimulantia" and writing a script that he will shoot next summer.

Mai Zetterling is directing a feature about women for Sandrews. The women include Gunnel Lindblom, Harriet Andersson, Anita Bjork, Eva Dahlbeck and Britta Pettersson. Jorn Donner, whose first feature "A Sunday in September" was honored in Venice but did poorly at Swedish boxoffice, has signed a two year contract with Sandrews. His next film stars Harriet Andersson and Zbigniew Cybulski, the well-known Polish actor from "Ashes and Diamonds" and numerous other Polish features.

Ake Falck is directing a filmization of a novel by Stig Dagerman for Minerva. Bo Widerberg, whose second feature "The Block Raven" was acclaimed by most Swedish critics, will write and shoot a third film. Yours sincerely found "The Block Raven" rather boring and too exclusively Swedish. It skillfully conveys some moods from Sweden at the time of the Berlin Olympics. The structure of the film is similar to "The Baby Carriage." Rather away from her home environment, Widerberg chose a boy in this predicament.

From an artistic and technical point of view Vilgot Sjoman improved considerably in "491" as compared to "The Mistress." Nature-lovers also received an opportunity to see Jan Lindblad's first full-length color about aspects of nature, most especially birds.

Decline of Yanks

Five years ago American films accounted for about 50% of all the new films shown in Sweden. During 1963 American films accounted for 38% of the total. Without question one of the reasons for the decrease is the lessening of interest in the United States. During the early postwar years the United States and aspects of American life, which also included films, were models, symbols of freedom and democracy. This admiration for things American has disappeared almost entirely. Like any craze, there was a reaction.

Members of the postwar generation often felt they had more ties with the United States than with Europe. The younger generation feels at home in reconstructed Europe and is now relatively indifferent to the United States. It seems unavoidable that the figures for American productions shown in Sweden during a single year are going to become proportionally smaller.

The basic atmosphere in the Swedish film industry is confidence. There are some hopes of creating a Nordic market. As Kenne Fant, the president of Svensk Filmindustri, says the Nordic countries have a population of 16 million people and if this market can be united for Nordic films, the Nordic film industry would obtain a strong position.

Svensk Filmindustri is making "4 x 4" largely to test the market and the different countries rulings on how the film will be taxed. A film can get all the Swedish advantages if 25 percent of the capital is Swedish and the director, a leading actor or actress or the photographer is a Swedish citizen. Rulings in the other Nordic countries are not quite as clear.

For the autumn Kenne Fant is planning a couple of co-productions but, so far, they still have not taken final form.

A few important changes among the executives include Rune Waldecrantz of Sandrews is going to become the principal of the newly established "film college," critic Bengt Idestam-Almquist, known as "Robin Hood," has been appointed curator of the archives at the new Film Institute, Bertil Lauritzen has left Svensk Filmindustri for the Film Institute, Bengt Forslund, the editor of egghead film mag "Chaplin," has succeeded Lauritzen as the head of the shorts department of Svensk Filmindustri, photographer Goran Strindberg has been appointed to head the photographers at Swedish TV, Gunnar Oldin left Europa Film to return to free-lance writing and occasional tv programs about films.

NORWAY PRODUCTION UP

By PAL BANG-HANSEN

Oslo.

Norweigan producers made six features last year. It's likely more will go under lensing this year. The Norwegian Parliament has passed an act providing greater support to the local film industry, and prospects for Norwegian-Danish-Swedish coproductions are good.

Up to now we have seen one Norwegian film this year, "Operasjon Sjosproyt," a naval comedy in color, of local interest only.

Andre Bjerke the poet wrote "Bells in the Moonlight," a thriller now shooting by the halfofficial company Norsk Film. Kare Bergstrom directs. Cameraman is Hans Nord.

Contact Film has finished "What a Robbery!" tenth comedy by this company. Oivind Vennerod directed tale about how three men robbed 50,000 bottles of liquor.

"Marengo," tells of a refugee who secures citizenship in a new country. It was made in Italy and Norway, with the Hungarian born actor Tom Felleghi in the lead. Nils R. Muller directed.

Active Arne Skouen made "Father Takes Gold," another of only native interest.

Svensk Filmundustri plans to make an Inter-Nordic film "4x4," an episode concerning winter, spring, summer, and autumn as seen by four young directors from Sweden, Denmark, Finland, and Norway. Rolf Clemens, 26, will handle the Norwegian part-spring. His script is written by television's Sten Rune Sterner.

Other film comedies are planned by Informasjonsfilm a/s, Team-film a/s, and ESS-film a/s. The film year in Norway looks promising. Doubtful, however, if more than one or two projects will have some interest outside Scandinavia.

Stingy Publicity Marks Americans In Copenhagen, Smart Press

By J. R. KEITH KELLER

Copenhagen.

If the turnover at Danish film theatre box offices fall a little short of the hopes generated by an extraordinary output of good foreign pictures during the 1963-'64 winter season, part of the blame lies squarely with the cramped American fingers holding the publicity purse-strings.

The Danish press is always ready to cooperate with good publicity ideas but by the same token the Danish press is practically impossible to bamboozle with the cheap and phoney kind of come-on that still passes in many other countries.

Furthermore, a personal approach with good ideas is demanded by amusement editors. Every paper wants its own version of even such routine stories as a Monday's new B-picture release.

This requires skilled publicity personel. Only a very few are operating in the American film companies' Danish offices. General explanation: they are underpaid. At the same time, even the best of the film touters here get very little in the way of help from the companies' head offices.

Average monthly take-home pay for a publicity man (or woman) of thorough training is about 1650 Kroner. This compares to a cub reporter on a minor newspaper. Some of the publicity women have to double as secretaries for exchange managers. Word "publicity" embraces posters and all kinds of advertising as well.

6% of Firstrun

Average promotion budget on a picture released in Denmark is 6% of the net take from the premiere theatre. As soon as a picture is given extraordinary publicity treatment such as a visit from one of its leading performers, the publicity people are in a sweat because they don't know whether they will be allowed the extra money needed to pay for the visitor's hotel etc. Often, the exchange manager has to step in with money from his own expense account.

Visits by performers are all important and the only sure-fire spacegrabbers in the Danish press. Paramount, Metro, Warner and 20th-Fox have not had a single American star here during this past season.

United Artists brought in Stanley Kramer and George Chakiris and had them on television, too. Columbia is way ahead in all publicity with smoothly handled Royalty and Nobility command performances attended by such film personalities as Carl Foreman, George Hamiton, Senta Berger, Omar Sharif, Harold Lloyd and Leslie Caron.

At the United Artists publicity office efficient work is done by Nils Ollgaard in getting attention without using too much money. He has had Danish priests recommend their flocks from the pulpit to go see "Lilies of the Field." For the "Pink Panther" preem, he invited 200 Danish bartenders to come up with an original Danish Pink Panther cocktail and dispense it among the other guests. Adding a dash of Sherry Heering gave the drink a local flavor.

At Columbia, press chief Ingeborg Keller (no relative) shies away from showing her own blonde handsomeness around, but she is fully journalistic in her approach to the press and rarely fails in getting the publicity she wants for her product.

Street ballyhoo is rarely seen in Denmark, although a Margaret Rutherford effigy was seen riding a black horse down Copenhagen's main stem recently. The police normally are stingy with permissions to stage any kind of publicity parades. But not nearly as stingy as the American film companies where it come to budget.

Penny Tax Looms Large in Village Theatre Operation—Austria's Film Industry 'Supports' Legitimate Plays

By EMIL MAASS

Vienna.

When the victorious alliance of Britain, Russia, France and America divorced Austria from the Germany into which Hitler had absorbed it, this revived republic faced a theatrical shambles. A first decision was to help "culture" by imposing a special tax upon film theatres, not considered culture. Ever since, the Kultur Groschen, or cultural penny tax, has been collected from one popular amusement, the cinema, for the support of another popular amusement, the legitimate theatre.

The tax is a nuisance partly because small and cashiers typically round it off in calculation to the nearest 50. Tiny coins still circulate in Austria but are increasingly scarce.

With the number of houses in all Austria dropping from 1,288 to 1,188 Vienna has lost only one tiny situation. However, attendance is off 11% while prices are upped 10%. Showmen seriously argue that this special tax, a bit more than one American cent, is unbearable. The average price of a seat is close to 40c. Exhibitors even voted to hold a protest strike, closing for one or two days. Though the favoring majority was 75%, it never came to the strike and the situation today is, that the cultural penny remains for one more year. Several new plans are being discussed, among them to make television the supporter of legit.

Though the average filmgoer does not understand, that the one cent, calculated anyway in the admission ticket, could hurt the house owner so much, that he cannot make a living out of his enterprize, officials of Rank and MGM Vienna office explained the contradictory and complicated situation. There are points in this "tax battle," that this cultural penny after all plays an important role in the industry.

The penny tax is significant in

SWEDISH FILMS ARE NOT A ONE-MAN'S-JOB

For many people today Swedish films are synonymous with the films of Ingmar Bergman, two of which the international public can look forward to seeing in the near future.

"THE SILENCE"

—"A masterpiece destined to be mentioned years afterwards as a milestone in cinema." —Variety.

"AS FOR ALL THESE WOMEN"

—Bergman's first color film, a delightful comedy from the gay twenties.

But there are other Swedish films than those of Ingmar Bergman. In 1963 at three international film festivals Sweden introduced three new directors presenting their first feature films:

At Cannes Bo Widerberg's

"THE BABY CARRIAGE"

—a human drama of a lonely young girl making her way in life.

At Berlin Vilgot Sjoman's

"THE MISTRESS"

—awarded the Silver Bear for the best female interpretation.

At Venice Jorn Donner's

"A SUNDAY IN SEPTEMBER"

—a penetrating analysis of a young couple's marriage in the Sweden of today. This film was awarded the prize in the "Opera Prima" class.

In 1964
The Swedish Film Institute *

presents the second instalment of the Swedish New Wave:

Bo Widerberg's

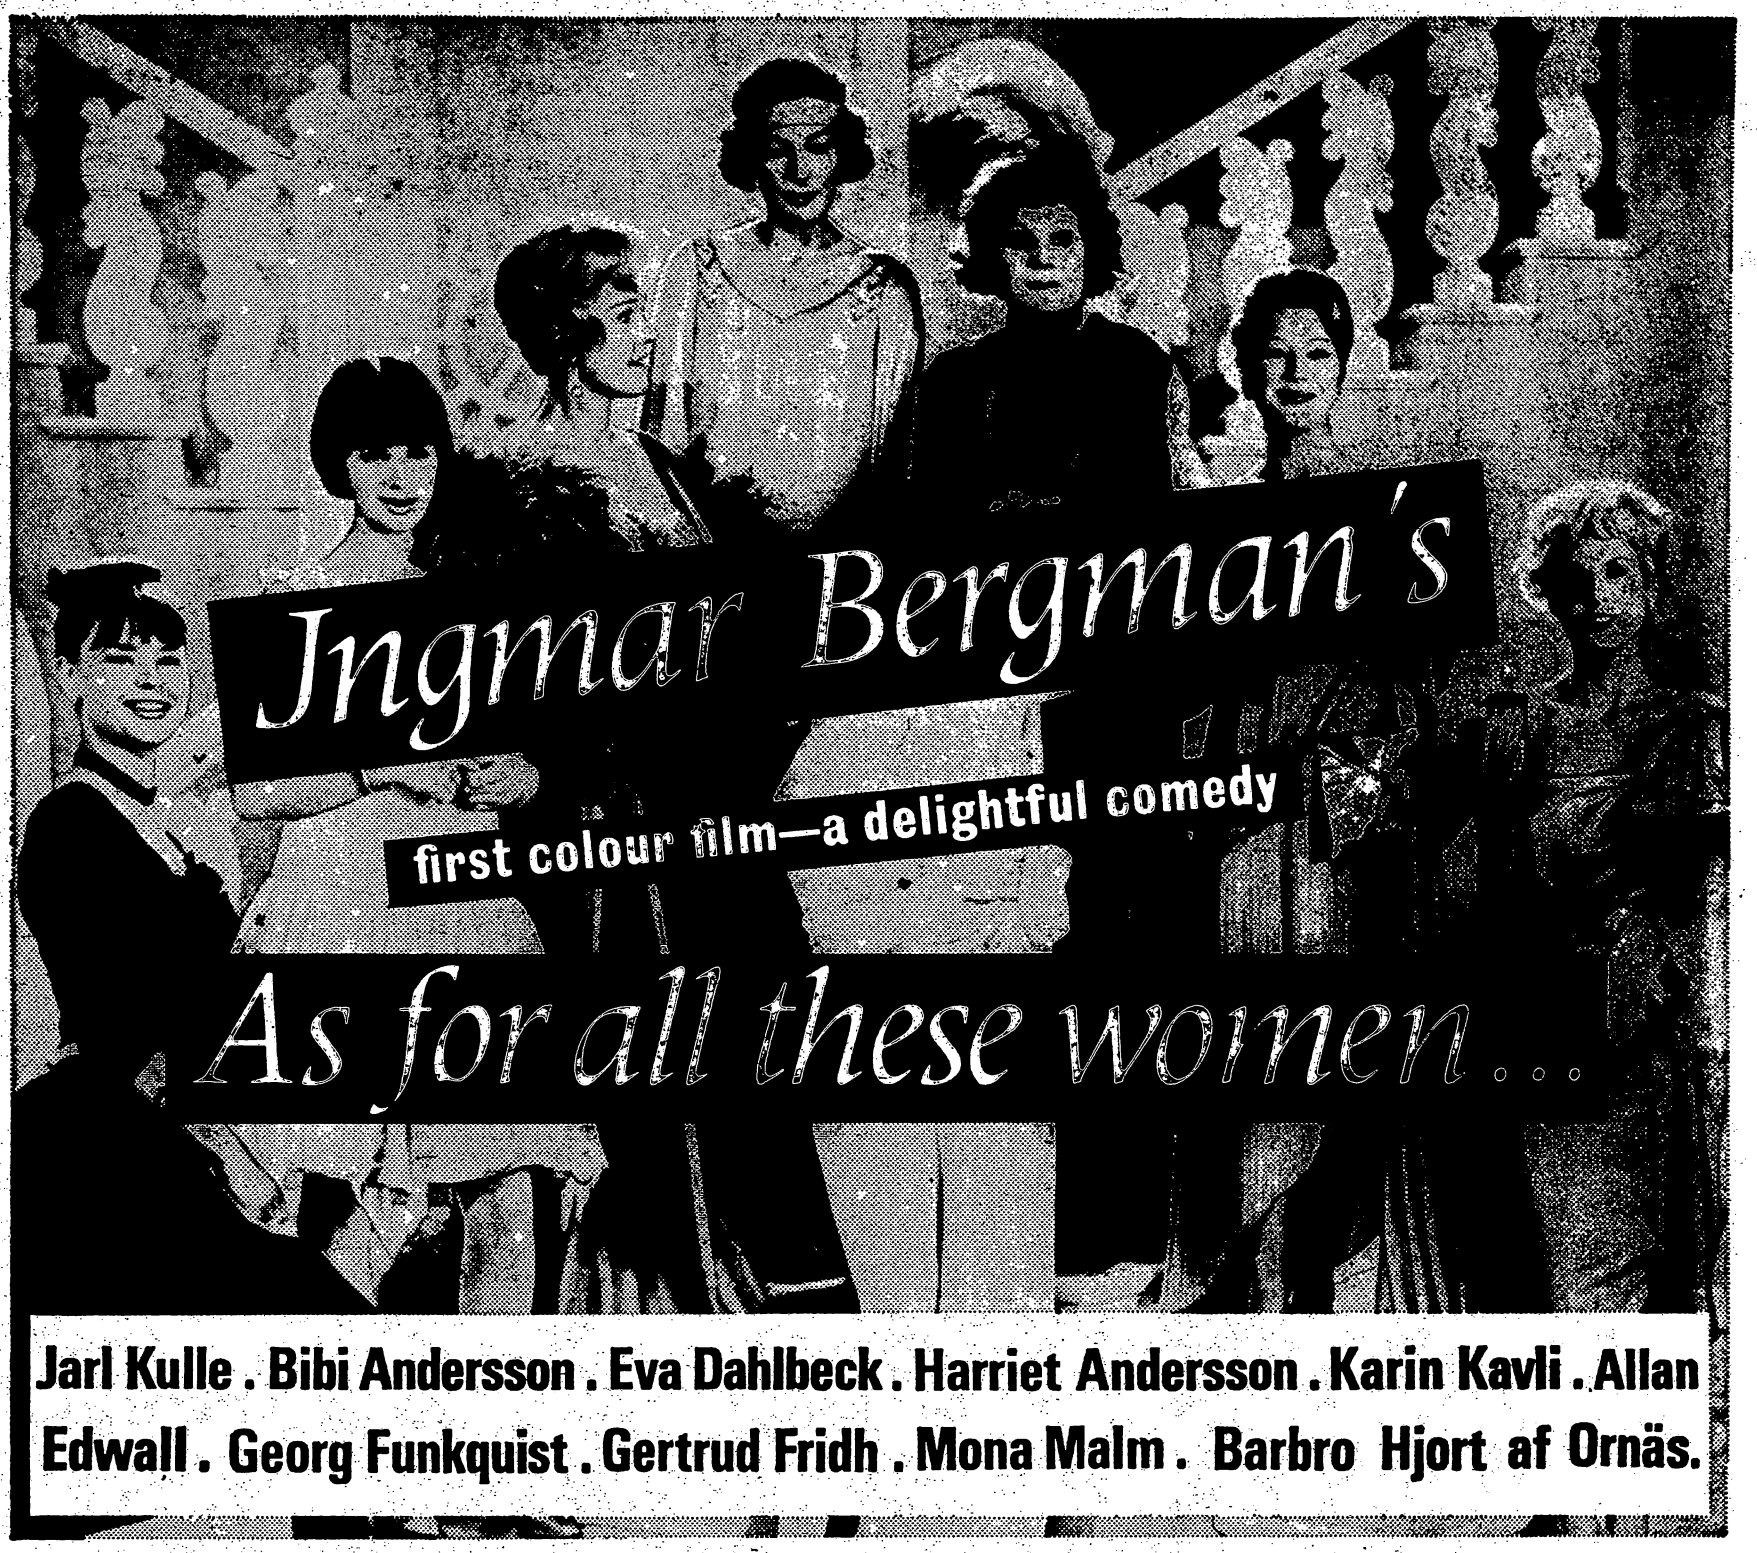
"RAVEN'S END"

—a young man's revolt against his parents set in the slums of Malmo in 1936.

Vilgot Sjoman's

"491"

—a shocking disclosure of teenagers in the back yard of a welfare state.



Jorn Donner's

"TO LOVE"

—a story of a young widow and a love that frees her of her inhibitions.

 The Swedish Film Institute—Kungsgatan 48, Stockholm C, tel. 23 04 90, Cables: Filminstitutet Stockholm—is an independent foundation. It has been set up by the Swedish Government in collaboration with the entire Swedish film trade—producers, distributors and exhibitors. Its aim is not only to stimulate the production of artistically important Swedish films and to promote them outside Sweden but also to widen and deepen the interest for good films in Sweden.

the provinces where little cinema stands are family affairs, with cashier, ushers, projectionist all in the family. Village houses may gross, say, $200 on five unreelings in two days on the weekend. Roughly the money is divided three ways—a third to the distributor, one-third for various taxes, and one-third retained by the showman. The income tax on such a tiny situation may run $2,400 a year.

Distributors support endeavors of the theatre owner association because they, the renters, are held responsible for the correct accounting. If the house owner defrauds, the distributor must pay the debt to the tax office. As back taxes are "privileged" for seizure, an Austrian distributing company was obliged to pay the tax debts of a middle sized house. For this reason the 35 distributing companies resolved to immediately stop delivery of their reels in case of non-remittance of the cultural penny. (The house owner does not pay this tax directly, but remits it together with the rentals to the distributor).

Finland May Modify Censor Rules & Regs

Helsinki.

Film censorship has been a subject of considerable discussion for sometime. Not long ago youthful groups picketed the Parliament building and marched through the streets of downtown Helsinki. Placards demanded either the abolition or revision of the censorship laws.

As always sensitive to new trends, President Urho Kekkonen quickly declared that the censorship regulations would be studied. In practice the newly proposed laws are a re-write of the former ones. They allow whole films or parts of them to be banned if they can be regarded injurious to the mental health of the people in the audience, if they are pornographic or if they "can harm the nation's relations with a foreign power."

Most recent bans include Ingmar Bergman's "The Silence" and Jorn Donner's "A Sunday in September."

Oslo One-Third Of Norway Market

Oslo.

Burned down, Oslo's only suitable house for widescreen product, the Colosseum, should reopen in the fall. Columbia's "Lawrence of Arabia" is the most likely first booking, with 20th-Fox's "Cleopatra" probably second. This is the house which showed the Cinemiracle "Windjammer." The fire came last winter the morning after Columbia's "Lolita" opened. Some 11 men were injured when the roof fell during the blaze.

Resumption of the Colosseum can result in better rentals for American production, since this is a tight market. Actually there is no doubt that the American industry takes a big share of revenues here though data on boxoffice performance is shrouded in thick secrecy here. Oslo which has 18 cinemas is probably one-third of the Norweigan market.

Start Outdoor Work, On 'Trapp Story'

Salzburg, April 22.

Director Robert Wise arrived here this week and immediately began working on his newest, "The Trapp Story" (A Sound of Music), with Julie Andrews and Christopher Plummer as leads. It is set for release in the spring of next year. Half of the film will be shot in Salzburg, the remainder in Hollywood.

Most of the Salzburg scenes will be shot outdoors, as the scenery here is like Tyrol, where the action of play partly takes place.

Tourism—A License to Gyp?

Longtime American Abroad on Clip 'n' Take on Both Sides of the Atlantic

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Paris.

Not too many years ago, a couple of w.k. Americans named P. T. Barnum and Texas Guinan put their heads together (which was quite a feat, everything considered) and coined the phrase, "There's one born every minute." They were talking about suckers in general, or night club clients in particular, but their credo would still be timely and appropriate today, especially if applied to tourists in any corner of the world. As a matter of fact, if there were such a thing as an International Association of Tourists, it might well adopt as its motto, "Travel and Be Took." Except that this indicates a resistance, a resentment. Which is not the case. Hep tourists know they're going to be rooked a bit here and yon. They expect it and make allowance for it.

What is a tourist? A tourist is someone who travels for fun (as opposed to travel for business) in any "foreign" country away from home. A guy from Brooklyn who travels to Palm Beach is on vacation, but when he makes the same trip at more-or-less the same expense to Cannes, he is on a tour. Similarly a Frenchie in Deauville is not a tourist, but he becomes a tourist when he visits Scandinavia.

Chances are any naive character walking down the main street of any village or hamlet in the world has to hurdle a constant parade of grifters, hurstlers and con-men. The differential comes when you're "on tour" because then, usually, you've got the added handicap of battling the lingo. Of course, you can go to a school before making a trip and "learn" the foreign language, but 10 times out of nine that is like putting a badge on yourself. The "foreigner" whom you are trying to convince simply snorts.

Your loyal reporter (me!) spoke to French citizens who recently "toured America" for the first time in their lives. Three of the sextet had no beefs; they found everything exactly as they had expected to find them. (Is this good?) One guy said he got short-changed twice by waiters during his four week trip and once by a taxidriver. One dame said that "most of the hotels" she went to cost more per day than she had been promised in advance. One guy said that he had been told he could make the trip on an average of $5 dollars a day, so he had figured on spending eight and it only cost him seven; he was a happy man.

Your loyal reporter did not make a similar survey in reverse because he lives here, in Paris, and he tries to make believe he is a Parisian and not a tourist (which is not always easy). So he stays away from most of the tourists from Detroit, Chicago and Long Island who come a-visiting. (Besides, how many times can a guy go to the Folies, the Eiffel Tower and the Lido?). So I don't know what the current statistics are, what the percentage is of Americans being "took" while touring Paree. But 10 will get you 20 that the odds are the same on either side of the ocean.

Look at it this way. A guy on a "tour" always has a couple of rough handicaps to hurdle. First, there is the matter of language; some people have good, quick ears and catch on quick; some always have to struggle. This is a two-way nuisance. It slows you up and it labels you as a mark. Next comes the matter of money. Most of the European countries use a decimal system akin to that used in the U.S., making it fairly simple to figure prices and costs. In some spots, like England, the coinage is of an antiquated metric system so complicated that only native-born mathematicians have ever been known to unravel it.

Prof. Harold Meyers, of London, says the British money is a cinch to figure. In an exclusive statement to this newspaper, he says, "Calculating a 15% tip in a London restaurant is easy. Work on the basis that 15% of one pound is three shillings, so if the bill is four pounds, the appropriate tip is 12 shillings. There are 12 pennies in a shilling, so if you want to tip appropriately on less than a shilling you simply divide the number of shillings involved by 12 and multiply by 15. Nothing to it."

So now that you understand how easy all this is, let's go on to the next step, the psychological gimmick. We have all heard, all our life, that "living abroad is cheaper than at home." Well, t'aint necessarily so. Prices change, costs fluctuate, depending on economic conditions locally. Also depending on the good old law of supply and demand. A few years ago Spain was a good cheap place to go. So a lot of customers came and prices went up. Ditto Greece. Or Italy.

The American Express and Thos. Cook & Co., the two leading international peddlers of packaged tours, both claim that costs have not gone up very much. An Amexco official says that what cost $100 some 10 years ago in Europe would cost $130 today, adding that life at home has gone up at an even higher rate. A Cook exec says that prices of hotels, restaurants, etc., in Europe, have gone up 25-35% in the past five years. These numbers don't match and neither of the "spokesmen" wanted to be identified by name. In other words, they were guessing. So, since one gues is as good as another, your reporter suggests that the rise has been on about the same level overall as it has been at home.

A top luxury room at the Savoy in London or the Plaza-Athenee in Paris or the St. Regis in New York always cost just about the same. A drink in the George V bar in Paris or a similar top-level saloon in New York, sets you back the same amount. A top-level restaurant knocks you on the noggin at just about the same rate whether you're rustling your groceries in Beverly Hills or the Via Venito.

It's in the side-street,out-of-the-way spots that you can, sometimes, get a better break. But of course then you're on your own, you're taking a chance. That's where Tourist Boards and travel agents become valuable. Every country has a Tourist Board. Every street corner has a travel agent. Most of them are on the level and all of them try to be helpful. Sure, they're all on the heavy sell or the soft sell but always it's "sell." Sure, they count themselves in for a cut, but it pays to give them a listen. They'll make the reservations and give you the correct prices and details.

The French Tourist Board, for instance, has managed to make it obligatory for all French restaurants to post their menus and list their prices in their windows, which must state clearly how much the food costs, how much the tip or "service" costs, how much the "cover charge" costs. Ditto, hotel charges (except in de luxe inns).

A smart French newspaperman, a few months ago, dressed up like an American (cigar, horn-rimmed glasses, etc.) and made a tour of Paris. He went into a restaurant, ordered a meal (using a heavy American "accent"), didn't look at the numbers of his bill and was surprised to find that the change he was handed was wrong. (Try it in Toledo, using a French accent and see if it's any different). He left his change on the table for 15 minutes and was amazed when the waiter came by, picked it up and said "Merci." (Try it in Hartford using an Italian accent and see what happens). He went into a fly-by-night cabaret and ordered champagne, learning to his horror that they gave him gassed-up vino. In a cabaret? Remember what good ole Texas Guinan said?

Hong Kong's Active Film Production

Made 261 Features—Some Exported to West—Leaders In Asiatic Industry

By KIT MASTERS

Hong Kong.

During 1963 the Colony's 120 film companies produced 261 feature films in Chinese for both local and overseas distribution. Many, of course, were made on a low budget; but the six major studios, using wide screen and color techniques, make more lavish pix which have won honors throughout South-East Asia.

High standards achieved by the larger studios is reflected by the fact that Shaw Brothers won awards for technical excellence at the 10th Asian Film Fest, held in Tokyo. It was at this festival that Shaw Co. won a total of five awards. They also won nine awards at the Taipei Golden Horse Fest, and their film "Empress Wu" was exhibited at Cannes. Another Shaw success was "Madame White Snake" which attracted record audiences in Hong Kong for a Chinese film. Motion Picture and General Investment Co. Ltd., separately won a Taipei award for the best dramatic film with its "Father Takes a Bride." Dong Cheng received the best actor award and the same film studio won the best film script award.

Shaws' Movie Town, their studios at Clearwater Bay in the Kowloon countryside, is a large site with scenes ranging from the earliest times to the present day on display on the various lots. Chief rival has just built new studios in the same direction as Shaws on a smaller scale.

Actors and actresses from both major studios and others are constantly making personal appearance tours from Hong Kong to other Asian markets such as Taipei, Bangkok, Singapore and Malaysia.

Several local companies have already made co-productions with Japanese, French or Italian outfits thus ensuring continental distribution. The acceptance by western audiences of Chinese films has now encouraged Hong Kong studios to look upon Europe as a possible market for certain of their product.

The use of Hong Kong as a suitable locale for shooting both full-length feature films, television documentaries and promotional films was again demonstrated during the year when film production units visited the Colony. The 1963 visitors included film-makers from America, Australia, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Italy and Japan. One major production was Columbia's "Lord Jim." Richard Brooks brought in Peter O'Toole, Jack Hawkins, James Mason, Curt Jurgens, Noel Purcell, Paul Lukas and Akim Tamiroff.

Loved Mute Gleason in 'Gigot'; Hated 'Music Man'; Hong Kong Fans Go for Slapstick and Slaughter

Hong Kong.

Cinema-going is an extremely popular pastime in Hong Kong. There are now 79 situations with a total of 84,461 seats. Hong Kong Island has 28 cinemas (30,840), Kowloon 34 (40,850), and the New Territories 17 (12,771). The majority of the houses have air-conditioning and wide screens. The admission prices range from 20c to 60c, U.S. value, for firstrun ordinary films. For roadshow pix range is US 35c to $1.40. When Cleopatra opened its run here at two houses, Roxy (HK), and Sands (Kowloon), the top prices were $1.40. The average house at that money for a pix that was out considerably before Far East showing, was 15%. Now after the initial eightweek run the admission prices are normal, from 20-60c and the result is that both houses are now enjoying a worthy response from the public.

Average fan here likes violence, sex, murder, lust, rape, war, killing of any description, and battle scenes with mighty hordes of the conqueror, or the sheriff, thundering across the screen. Boxoffice success is assured for any pix that has a good supply of these commodities.

Top B.O. success of 1963 was "Mondo Cane" from Italy though regarded by many as virtually obscene and certainly disgusting, yet the houses were packed by people who went as many as eight or nine times to see it.

On the other hand the public here is most unpredictable. Last year a film that had great success and caused a certain amount of surprise in the process was Fox's "Gigot." The success of this film was thought by many to be due to the fact that there was little or no dialog, as Jackie Gleason portrayed a deaf and dumb mute. This made film easier for the local Chinese population to understand, and combined with a touching story it was a great success. This particular picture however, set a precedent among films of this nature.

There were two good examples last year of the likes and dislikes of the local masses. There was the case of the pic called "Island of Love," which was a very low budget "g" class American movie with a cast of four, a small island, no change of costume or scenery, and the very simple storyline of a young couple going to an offshore island for a picnic together, the guy goes back for something they have forgotten, and the rest of the pic is the girl being pursued by an escaped lunatic who also happens to be hiding on the island. The publicity was keyed to rape, which never happened or seemed likely on screen but the theatre was packed to capacity for three weeks.

In the dislike department there was "Music Man," which lasted three days before being replaced by a lesser film with more action.

Jerry Lewis has been successful with some of his offerings, but not so successful with his films that have not had abundant slapstick. For this reason, the British comedian, Norman Wisdom, has universal appeal here and the majority of his films are well attended.

Sophisticated comedy as typified by Paramount's "A New Kind of Love," misses the mark completely, with the reason given as simply, "all talkee, no makee!" Boxoffice favorites are Rock Hudson, Doris Day, John Wayne, Yul Brynner, Kirk Douglas, Kim Novak, Steve McQueen, Robert Mitchum, James Stewart, and the muscle-man of all the continental films, Steve Reeves.

There has been no significant change in the studio and laboratory facilities available in the country since a year ago. For one thing, the many restrictions on the import of equipment due to foreign exchange difficulties continue. Any real expansion is therefore ruled out. The Authorities permit imports only for essential maintenance, such as spare parts.

Unslaked Thirst for Chinese Lingo: Singapore Showmanship Dynamic

By GORDON OOI TAW CHIEW

Singapore.

The concentrated voice of Singapore's Chinese population is currently raised in a demand for more Chinese films. When 1.8 million Chinese voices (approximately 75% of the city's population) are combined, the resulting sound is a very impressive one.

More Chinese films—that, in an oriental coconut shell, is the happy position of the Chinese film industry here today, and with good reason. Many new production companies have emerged recently. One, the New Era Movie Co., has recently finished "The Black Gold" in Kuala Lumpur, administrative center of the Federation of Malaya. Producer Tang Pek Chee told VARIETY that the potentiality for Chinese pix is great because it's still a seller's market.

"Hong Kong sends us about 300 chinese (Mandarin, Cantonese and Teochew) films a year. Our appetite here is voracious and we can take twice that number. When we don't have enough Chinese pictures, we dub Japanese productions into Mandarin to occupy the void."

Tang's first Chinese feature, "The Lion City," in 1960, did socko biz—another reason why he followed that with "Gold," also starring Orchid Wong and Lian Tong Seng. Tang says "We've absolute faith in local Chinese film productions. All it takes is time. Before long we'll be another Hong Kong."

Newcomers

Another newcomer on the local film scene is the Singapore & Malaya Film Co., captained by Chong Loy Shin, who says his current project, "The Morning Mist" (in Mandarin), would "picture the people's culture, customs, manners and provide new opportunity for local artists, 15 of whom are in our employ." Rin Yin directs.

In nearby Kuala Lumpur, the Malayan Film Investment Ltd. has declared an intention to make Chinese and Malay films for endemic circulation, restricting its scope for expansion.

Merdeka Film Studios, also based in Kuala Lumpur, is now two years old. Producer Ho Ah Lock joined forces with the Shaw Brothers Organization here to produce what he termed "extraordinary Malay pictures for domestic consumption." He emphasized the possibility of ultimately going into Chinese pix as well.

Shaw Brothers

The giants of them all are the Shaw Brothers and the Cathay organizations which, between them, supply most of the market here from their Hong Kong studios. They also operate Malay film production units here.

"We go where the money is," said Run Me Shaw, brother of Run Run. The letters SB stand for Shaw Brothers. "You don't fish big fish in rivers; you get them in the sea." That is the story of SB, once stymied in China, now the biggest show masters of the Far East, excepting Japan. In 1925 they planted the foundation stone of their film domain in Singapore and today own a chain of 127 cinemas, nine amusement parks, three film studios (here, Hong Kong and Kuala Lumpur), plus reps in U.S., Europe and throughout Asia.

Hong Kong Studio

Conscious that motion pictures are assuming major importance both as a basis for deeper cultural understanding and for mutual friendship among nations of free Asia, the brothers have, to date, made many spectacular extravaganzas. Their studio in Hong Kong is responsible for such Shawscopes as "Yang Kwei Fei" (The Magnificent Concubine) whose opulence got them the Grand Prix for superior production matter at the 1962 Cannes Film Fest. Pooling the acting resources of vet film man Yen Chun and his wife, Li Li-Hua, this cinematic Chinese opera of an aged Chinese emperor's love for his pet court lady, Kwei Fei, has qualities that they hope to commercialize on in the U.S. Arrangements are being made to have it screened overseas, according to SB Publicity Director William H. Goodwin.

"Yang Kwei Fei" was first in a trilogy of multi-dollar productions on the lives of famous Chinese mademoiselles of ages gone to decay. Number two, "Wang Chao-chuan," has just been completed with Lin Dai in the title role. This one sacrificed her happiness 2,000 years back to enter voluntary exile, lest her native soil be invaded. This type film naturally helps Singapore history-cum-literature students. (Half of Singapore's commalty is under 21 and schooling.)

'Empress Wu'

The Shaws are giving much ballyhoo to the trio of pix—last of which is "Empress Wu." Heavy advance bookings for them are commonplace. Singapore has 30 to 40 first-run and open-air cinemas and new theatres go up like bean sprouts. The Ocean Cinema, recently opened by millionnaire banker Ko Teck Kin, the Palace, King's, Hoover, Majestic, Hollywood, Oriental, Malborough, Ciro, Odeon, Odeon Katong and Kim Hua show principally Chinese pictures. The Garrick, owned by Lim Eng Kwan of South-East Asia Film Co., shows Indian and Egyptian pix with occasional Western product.

Goodwin believes that "Our production will meet local requirements. They're big shows, good enough for film fests and good enough for Chinese everywhere. 'Empress Wu' participated at Berlin, "Golden Trumpet" at San Francisco, "The Deformed" at Sydney.

The Shaws' pride is "Beauty and the Kingdom," winner of several Golden Harvest awards at Asian Film Fests. Lin Dai, as the Beauty, tops the list of Asian film stars when it comes to collecting these Asian awards. "Kingdom" has been released in Australia, India and Japan and soon goes into the U.S. as Asia's answer to "Cleopatra." It will show the outside world Shawlywood Studio in Hong Kong, spreading over 650,000 sq. ft.

The Shaws recently completed shooting, in Mandarin, "My Love In Malaya," with Ching Fong and Lan Ti heading the cast. Film, made in Malacca on the Malayan mainland, carried both English and Chinese sub-titles.

Singapore Distribs

With so many Chinese films to handle, Singapore needs numerous film distributors. These include Kong Ngee Film (which also has a studio in Hong Kong), Golden Star Film Unit, China Film Enterprise, Radio Cinema Service, SB and the Cathay Organization.

Production of Chinese films locally provides a major component of economic activity. The Cathay organization, chaired by Dato (Lord) Loke Wan Tho, knows that in a plural society of many racial origins, they must create films for the widest necessary market. Their Singapore Cathay Keris Studio is currently producing only Malay pix but their Hong Kong Motion Pictures and General Investments makes Chinese films.

Some 50 years ago the film, as a popular form of entertainment in Singapore, was still in the development stage but improvements in film production have reached the public's heart. Cathay is equipped with the latest G.B. Kalee projectors, providing for all new techniques, including Cinemascope, Vistavision and Stereophonic sound. In 1957 it launched a $3,400,000 scheme to build new cinemas here and in Malaya, Sarawak, Brunei and North Borneo to absorb Chinese films. Cathay also releases products locally of J. Arthur Rank, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Disney, and Allied Artists.

22 In Malay

"We must give the public our best," says Cathay exec Lim Keng Hor. "An average of 22 features, all in the Malay language, are made annually in Singapore by Cathay and SB. Local feature films are usually sold outright to foreign countries, so it is not possible to say if they are a big success in those countries. However, the number of nations which can use films in the Malaya tongue is very limited.

"New theatres are continually being built, not only by the two big companies but by local business interests who usually join up with us or SB.

"Tv has started to affect the Singapore cinema business. In Malaya, where tv was introduced last December, it's too early to say how much it will affect us but it is expected to do so.

"Musical films featuring teenage idols," he said, in regard to popular film types, "are very successful, as are outstanding comedies and such giant spectacular productions as "The Longest Day" (biggest b.o. grosser for 1963).

"Production of local features is considerably hampered by the extremely limited market for Malay-language films, particularly now that the Indonesian market is almost completely shut off by the 'confrontation' policy of the Indonesian government.

"Many of our films have won awards at the annual Asian Film Fests held at various Far Eastern capitals. Several of our contract stars have walked away with "best actress" awards. In 1958, our "Our Sister Heddy" swept the board, taking "best picture" and 11 other trophies.

"Cathay co-operated with Toho Films of Japan on a co-production "A Star In Hong Kong," which has been tremendously successful throughout the Far East and even in America. More co-productions with Toho are planned. Last year we made a sequel to "Hong Kong."

"More than 2,000,000 paying patrons buy tickets at Cathay's 60 houses every month."

Paul Yui, in charge of Cathay's Chinese Section, Films, confirmed that a large portion of this figure see Chinese pix, either at Odeon Katong or the New Alhambra, priority houses for such runs.

He, too, believes that Singapore can take more Chinese releases. Interest is increasing and even the non-Chinese-speaking audience is growing, thanks to English subtitles. People also recognize the importance of local films in keeping alive the local language, traditions, culture and the part native films play in nation-building. Thus the clamor for more Chinese, Indian and Malay pix.

A mere 300-odd screenplays aren't sufficient. Currently most of these are supplied by Hong Kong, Formosa and Communist China. With Malaysia—the political conception of this island state, independent Malaya and the Borneo territories as one entity—now forming, the number may dwindle pitifully. Malaya is very anti-Red, so much so that mainland Chinese productions are banned. These pix from behind the "Bamboo Curtain" need not contain sequences of anti-social behavior, horror, violence, excessive brutality or provocative emphasis on sex, or be calculated to inflame religious feeling or be subversive. Straightaway, it's a big "NO" for them.

A government statement reads: "Under a directive agreed to by the Federation of Malaya, the Board of Film Censors carried out the policy of July, 1959 to prohibit exhibition of all films, primary intent of which is the glorification or justification of colonialism, or which are calculated to bring Asians and so-called colored people generally into contempt, ridicule and hatred." Not a word was said about Commie Chinese productions but they are still banned, though the mart for them was never better in this part of the world, where the Chinese predominate.

ANZAC SHOWMEN, LIKE YANKS, CHILLY TO FESTIVAL 'HAZARDS'

By RAYMOND STANLEY

Melbourne.

With attendances at picture houses in Melbourne (pop. over 2,000,000) diminishing to a quarter of the 1956 pre-television era, and Saturday night sessions almost the only ones that play to anything like capacity, the Melbourne Film Festival holds a unique position.

Held annually (this year's will be the 13th) for a fortnight, covering three week-ends with the last always to take in the Queen's official birthday which is a public holiday Monday, more than 30 feature films from all countries are shown plus about 100 shorts. Film Festivals are held also in Adelaide and Sydney, but the Melbourne one has been going longest and is the best organized. Sometimes films are interchanged.

Pictures shown are usually by invitation, the first time seen Down Under and only the very best asked for.

As Customs Duty is not paid on the pictures and there is no hire charge they can be screened only to a closed membership of 4,000. The films are nonetheless subject to censorship.

Guiding light behind the Festival is its director, Hungarian-born Erwin Rado.

Skeptical Showmen

The Festival generally is not looked upon too benignly by the commercial trade here, who do not go very much out of their way to aid in the supply of films. If a film gets a bad write-up through the Festival it is deemed harmful at the box office, ignoring the fact the reverse can also apply. (This is the same showmen's credo often heard in New York and Hollywood.—Ed)

Without doubt the so-called art film, and certainly the Continental type of film, has increased in popularity here. Credit the Festival it screened the first German, Japanese and Russian films.

Commercial managements argue that with the increase in European migrants to Australia the Continental film was bound to become more popular. This is not exactly true as generally only the better quality European product is shown, and the average migrant is of the working class. One notices migrants very much in the minority in audiences.

If film-going is off generally in Melbourne, the drive-in theatre, introduced Down Under in 1953, is extremely popular. The state of Victoria leads in drive-ins with 35 of Australia's total of 130. And some drive-ins now double up on evening sessions.

A Top Critic

Film critics in Melbourne probably have little effect on the box office since many runs are usually pre-arranged and a critic will frequently praise a film, urging readers to see it as it is limited to say a week only. Yet Melbourne probably possesses one of the finest critics in the world in Colin Bennett of "The Age," who treats the film as a serious art.

Houses in Melbourne run separate sessions throughout the day, commencing at around 10 or 10:30 a.m. There are no Sunday performances. Occasionally there will be an advertised 'sneak' preview, with no indication what the picture will be.

In the suburbs at holiday times midnight horror shows are popular—and this holiday feature also draws at the drive-ins.

One enterprising surburban picture house—Hoyts' Regent at South Yarra—puts on Friday night supper shows beginning at 11:30 with coffee and savouries and a classic film, usually requested by patrons.

ABSURD DERRING-DO IN FILIPINO FEATURES

Manila.

One look at the current crop of Tagalog pictures suggests a basis formula—violent action. In every reel, something terrible is happening. Either the cowboy hero beats up a pack of villains, or vice versa. Somebody is forever drawing a gun, riding out to rescue a pretty girl from bad men, killing helpless individuals whose deaths have to be avenged later, or terrorizing a whole town. Things are moving all the time—to a violent climax. And the indiscriminate movement is threatening to topple the Philippines film industry.

In the face of difficulties like high taxes, the spiraling cost of raw materials, cut-throat competition from imported films, and lack of talent, the industry here is on the brink of action-madness.

There are far too many of the "wrong kind of action" pictures on the market. There is a deadly sameness. The publicity gives this sameness away. The claims are all of a kind: "The most exciting and rip-roaring showdown in gun-fights!" or "The most hilarious, heart-warming and action-filled picture ever filmed!" or "How bitter can a man get in his passion for revenge?"

Even glamor boys like Eddie Gutierrez and Lito Legaspi display a fighting stance in their current assignments. Character actors and villains are very much in demand, as targets for Joseph Estrada, Fernando Poe, Jr., Zaldy Zshornack, Romeo Vasquez and Bernard Bonnin.

Touters outdo each other in claiming that the picture of the

Summing Up Filipino Officials: Muy Simpatico But No Dough

Manila.

At the end of 1962, Filipino-produced gun-and-slugfest pictures had reached their sickening worst. It was hoped with every new film, that the action picture to end all action pictures might have been made. Not so. Crime and violence raged on as the prime theme of native films. It proved the case again in 1963 as regards the Tagalog dialect product.

This single-mindedness restrains both artistic and market potential. On the other hand such pictures may actively contribute to the precarious balance of the Filipino film industry at present. It is waging a fight for survival. Ideas and fresh perspectives are needed.

Showmen complain against astronomical production costs brought about by exorbitant multiple taxes, the high cost of the U. S. dollar and expensive imported raw materials and equipment. Five years ago $60,000 could finance a reasonably well-done full-length feature. Today $120,000 is considered austere as budgetary outlay for a picture.

The industry here has also started feeling the pinch from television competition which, although it has been noted by an articulate critic as a rotten peanut, now keeps a considerable portion of the entertainment-eager population at home, where they can see the better Tagalog pictures of the 1940s for free.

Actually, the Tagalog picture's most relentless competitor is the foreign feature which comprises about 85% of the film exhibited in this country.

Adding to the Filipino headache is censorship which operates on a double standard. Many a Filipino producer has had to shoulder additional expenses to reshoot an "objectionable" scene or revise the entire picture, even if the film is to be classified "for adults only."

The industry's hope for relief is government support. Here they point to France as sympathetic to producers. In these islands the big boon would be lower taxes on raw materials and the finished product, or exemptions from certain special fees. The Philippine Motion Picture Producers Assn. has pleaded its case before President Malacanang and initiated moves for supporting legislation in Congress. PMPPA Vice President Albert Joseph says that the President has expressed interest in helping (a) save and (b) develop the Filipino motion picture industry.

Producers are also seeking a quota for foreign pictures. They do not suggest an arbitrary percentage limiting the entry of imported films. They merely suggest that only Class A pictures from abroad should be allowed into the country. This idea is acceptable to English-picture exhibitors themselves, says Joseph.

Filipino producers also deplore the fact that there is not a greater patronage of Tagalog pictures. But this can only come with the improvement of their quality.

Meanwhile, neither Congress nor the President has made any concrete assurances. And in the present political milieu, there is little hope that the plight of this particular industry would win much interest in the powerful circle of government.

If the local motion picture industry has made any recent gains at all, it is not toward economic stability. It is in the area of censorship, where the PMPPA and the censors have at last put their cards on the table and agreed to settle down to the task of fashioning a better censorship system for Tagalog product.

Coproduction ventures last year improved the reputation of Philippines abroad. For instance, Tamaraw-Gold Coast's "No Man Is An Island" earned good notices in the United States, specially as regards Resty Umali's score. "No Way Out," also a Tamaraw coproduction with a Korean outfit, has been lauded by other Asians.

A foreign market has also been opened for Filipino pictures with the circulation abroad of such films as Eddie Romero's "Target 1-1-1," which has been bought by a U.S. film distribution agency, and Medallion Films' "Zigzag," which was noted by American distributors as a well directed and finely scripted feature.

India's 60 Studios

Bombay—the number of Studios and Laboratories in India is stationary at 60 and 39 respectively.

Though there was some "big talk" about co-production between Indian Studios and foreign interests, nothing took shape. True "The Householder" and "The Guide" were co-produced in India, but these cannot be said to be regular studio productions of that type. They were largely on location.

There is no talk of any co-production during 1964. And yet it remains true that low production costs, coupled with reasonably modern technical facilities, including recently set up color processing arrangements (Ramnord Laboratories and Film Centre at Bombay and Gemini Laboratories at Madras) and easy access to varied scenery there is grounds for supposing India a country of some filmic appeal to showmen outside.

Manila: Very Like Hollywood

Handful of Established Stars Call Terms in Philippines

By AARON PINES

Manila.

Some 151 Filipino features were cranked out by 38 active companies existing during 1963. Prevailing situation gave the advantage to those independents who operate with maximum flexibility, with no overhead expenses and maintenance problems to cramp their style.

Out of the present situations certain superstars turn producers themselves. Fernando Poe Jr., Joseph Estrada, Nida Blanca and Charito Solis were the busiest and highest paid performers, the total number of their pictures combined making up one third of all pictures produced last year. The era of the homegrown star bound by an iron-clad contract was at an end. Several stars, whose contracts terminated, chose either to go freelancing or to sign contracts allowing them to make pictures outside. A majority of stars forced non-exclusive pacts. Even Sampaguita Pictures, which used to keep its properties under lock and key, opened the door to allow its personalities to work elsewhere. Juancho Gutierrez, Rita Gomez, Eddie Garcia, Lolita Rodriguez, Dolphy and Panchito, Daisy Romualdez, Greg Martin and Tony Marzan all availed themselves of this opportunity.

This fluid condition has discouraged producers from intensive buildup campaign of new talents.

All this, plus other factors, made it difficult for many producers to make both ends meet. The cost of raw material reached staggering proportions — no less than $25,000 for one picture — pegging the minimum cost of one full-length film at $100,000. The multiple taxes took away sizable chunks from whatever profits the producers realize. Competition from abroad was strangling. For eign films outnumbered local pictures three to one.

The producers were forced to close ranks. The members of the former Big Four film companies and the active independent firms, in an unprecedented move, banded together into the Philippine Motion Picture Producers Assn., picking Atty. Manuel de Leon as the first president.

Group further increased its prestige by deciding to adopt a self-censorship code. De Leon declared that standards mutually agreed upon between censors and producers would eliminate conflicts and steer producers away from such troublesome films as "Ang Mananaggol Ni Ruben," which was banned, appealed, approved, withdrawn, and finally shown under the new title, "Ang Mananaggol."

There has been quite an insurgence of new theatres being built in the Philippines in 1963 and 1964. New air-conditioned theatre was built in South Zamboanga, also in Davao, air-conditioned, which cost half a million pesos, besides two new first run theatres in the City of Manila—Pearl and Podmon, as well as Cinerama. The Cinerama is, of course, running Cinerama Pictures while Pearl and Podmon are running independent pictures as the majors are all tied up with other theatres. As regards tv, for the moment, it has not yet began to hurt owing to the high cost of tv sets, but as time goes by, the cost of same is going down and once it can be bought by the majority of the people here, it will certainly affect the motion picture theatre. The type of film that is most popular are the cartoon shows for the children and "Untouchable" and Perry Mason type of pictures for the adults. The stars are those that are popular in the downtown theatres and without well-known stars, then we can say that "Untouchables" is probably the most popular.

New Zealand: Remote & Down Under

Filmmaking Mostly Travel and TV-Sell Stuff—Censors a Vexation—Big Pix Get Big Biz

By D. G. DUBBELT

Auckland.

Feature-film production is a rarity in New Zealand. In this, the most remote of the Down Under countries, film-making is almost entirely confined to travelogues and documentaries and, since the advent of television, to advertising shorts for the home screen. Currently justifying the use of the term "almost" is a modestly-budgeted feature titled "Runaway," which is shooting in and around Auckland, script will later take the unit further South. Made by Pacific Films, which broke even with its "Broken Barriers" of some years back, 'Runaway' is locationing at some of the country's more spectacular tourist spots, giving rise to speculation that backing, in part, is coming from the Government Tourist Agency. Directing is John O'Shea. Cast includes Tanya Binning, an 18-year-old Australian "surf girl" who, having appeared in the Sydney beach sequences of "Mondo Cane" is currently in N.Z. on a personal appearance run for the Jacopetti item.

National Film Unit, which has been making travel shorts and general documentaries for over 20 years, is still the country's most active producer. Last year its Ron Bowie scripted and directed "Amazing New Zealand" copped Venice's Bronze Lion Of St. Mark and many raves from the critics, and previous documentaries have been similarly honoured at European and English festivals.

The impact of video has led to a drop of over 7% in theatre attendances over the last two years, and the Government has recently waived the entertainment tax on all admissions. Superior productions are still notching good runs, with "Lawrence of Arabia," "Irma La Douce" and "Cleopatra" drawing good houses on Auckland's Main Stem. In the big cities, "Lawrence" was given the double release treatment — simultaneous opening in two theatres—an unusual exhibiting gambit for these parts, but highly effective as events proved.

Film censorship continues in the liberal tradition laid down by Gordon Mirams—now a UNESCO film policy-maker in Paris. Violence and striptease are most liable to scissoring. The trend started by "The World By Night" has been hardest hit in the latter category, much footage being eliminated in these striperamas. And the Peeping Tom-lensed episode from the Israeli Women's Army sequence in "Women Of The World" was trimmed to glimpses of girls changing in their tents and washing, semi-clad, at hand basins. Censor Doug MacIntosh slapped a R18 certificate on the Jacopetti release (persons under 18 not admitted), which, with the trimming, seemed to placate everybody.

Following the pattern of Rank, its English partner, New Zealand's biggest film-exhibiting and stage-show set-up, Kerridge-Odeon, has diversified to the point where, in addition to the large city shop-and-office block and suburban motel now a-building in Auckland, it has taken over the major share in a ferry company operating between Auckland and tourist islands out in the Hauraki Gulf. Due to arrive soon from Italy are two hydrofoils, designed to speed up the service and extend it to further-flung islands.

NOT ONE BUT MANY FILM TRADES: INDIA

By N. V. ESWAR

Bombay.

Ignoring as not germane to the present purposes of VARIETY the earlier phase of silent films made here, the talking picture industry of India commenced in 1931 with "Alam Ara." Pioneering studios were Prabhat of Poona, Ranjit of Bombay and New Theatres at Calcutta. Realism compels the statement that the early efforts were not impressive. There were 28 features made in 1931, of which 23 were in Hindi, three in Belgalese and one each in the Tamil and Teluga tongues. Naturally the polyglot divisions of India have hampered the development of a single industry with a common product.

Within four years, Indian film makers started grinding them out in hundreds. In 1935 the record shows 233 films for the whole country. The peak year of production came in 1960 when a total of 320 films turned out. During the 33 years of soundtrack the yearly average works out to 215 films, though since 1947 the production has been hovering above 275 and a little over 300 since 1959. The actual average for the last three years computes 310 films per year. Against these figures, the production for 1963 was so so at a little over 290.

Major part of the production is in Hindi tongue, though in recent years the number of Hindi films has been on a decline.

Next major figure is that of Tamil films whose total for the last 33 years at the end of 1963 was 1,099, followed by Bengali films with a total of 958 or a yearly average of 33 Tamil and 29 Bengali films. Production of these regional language films in recent years, however, is far above the average at well over 50 in the case of Tamil and 35 in the case of Bengali films.

Telugu language films come next with an overall total of 632 films for the last 33 years, representing a yearly average of 20 films. Recent production has been well over 35 films a year. The total of Marathi language films produced in the same period, is about 376, or a yearly average of 12 films, followed by a total of 169 films in the Canarese language, which means an average of only 5 films a year, though recent production is well over 12 films a year, the figure for 1963 being as many as 21.

The number of Gujrat language films produced during the 33 year period since 1931 is about 115, the average being a little over 3, while production for 1963 was about 6. The peak year was 1948 when as many as 28 Gujrati films were produced.

More Lingos

An import language is Malayalam spoken in Merala State. Total production since 1931 in Malayalam language came to 114, or an average of a little over 3 films. 1963, however, saw the release of as many as 11 films in Malayalam, while the maximum number for any number for any of the past years numbering 15 were turned out in 1962.

Production in other regional languages was and is quite nominal the average number being less than one a year in all the cases except Punjabi where the average works out at 2 films per year. Only 64 films in all were produced in Punjabi during the last 33 years, the peak year being 1938 and 1939 when seven films were produced in each year.

The number of films produced in Assamese and Oriya languages during the above period are 28 and 26 respectively, while the number of films produced in English in India total 16 for the same period. All these account for a total of 7,100 films produced in India since the talkie came into existence.

While most of the Hindi films are produced in Bombay studios, Bengali films are produced in Calcutta Studios and Tamil, Telugu, Canarese and Malayalam language films are produced in Madras, Hyderabad, Coimbatore, Mysore and Trivandrum Studios in the South. Nearly 60% of all films produced in India come from South Indian studios.

The estimated capital investment on Studios, Laboratories and Stores in India is placed at 200 million rupees while the value of pictures produced and in production is calculated to be another 200 million rupees in investment every year.

Studios and Production units among them employ a total force of 20,000, whereas the distribution wing has a strength of 10,000 persons. The number of persons employed in the publicity operations and other ancilliary wings is placed at about 10,000.

The raw film consumption is about 230,000,000 feet per year, valued at 17,500,000 rupees. The yearly bille on equipment and spares total about 6,000,000 rupees.

The annual turnover of over 300 films is the work of some 800 producers, and the fare is handled by 1,200 distribution outfits. These figures, specially of the producers, are very fanciful. It can only mean that almost all of the producers simply are not producing.

Annual income from Indian films is placed at 340,000,000 rupees, out of which 16,000,000 rupees represent the export earnings. These figures are based on the averages for the last three years. In other words, the Indian films earn only as little as 4.7% from the foreign market.

Export market for Indian films is rather restricted to the South East Asian region where there is a sizable concentration of Indian population in territories like Singapore, Malaya, South and East Africa and Ceylon etc. Here again business is confined mostly to films in the Hindi and Tamil languages, with sporadic interest in a few Telugu and other language films. Most of these are subtitled and a few successful films dubbed in local languages by the buyer.

Since the majority of the films priduced in India are a flop—only 10/12% of total production make the grade—in the domestic market itself, only a limited number of films in the top box office bracket get a foreign exposure. And these are the Spectacle Costume films based on Mythology, folklore or a distorted version of history.

At times, a few films with popular songs do act as a bait and these have done well in the traditional foreign areas.

Recently, due to some intense effort on the part of the Industry, other areas like Indonesia, Hong Kong, Viet Nam in South East Asia and Persian Gulf area, Kuwait, Iran, Iraq, Armenia and other Middle East countries and Russia have taken interest in Indian films. A few pictures with accent on dance and song sequences have registered themselves with audiences in these areas. Yet their success comes as a development in isolation and not a pointer of a steady expanding market for that type of fare.

India's Film Houses Reach 5,062, But That Figures Only One Per 86,400 Pop.

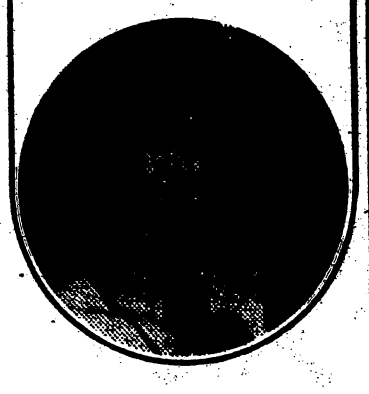
Bombay.

In 1921 there were only 117 film theatres in then undivided India. The number had reached 2,090 in 1945. The latter figure includes many theatres which went to Pakistan with Partition. This factor is mentioned so that one can get a correct perspective of the phenomenal increase in the number of theatres in India after bifurcation. The number of theatres in the present India at the end of 1963 was 5,062.

In terms of population it works out at only about one theatre for every 86,400 persons, against one theatre for every 4,400 persons in Italy, one for every 7,800 persons in France or one for every 10,500 of the population in the United States. Even so, India is fifth in world ranks, following USA, Italy, Japan and France and is far ahead of Great Britain, its former ruler.

There are vast rural areas where there are simply no cinemas, the folk live on next to nothing. No charge however trifling would be possible for them.

Madras State in South India has the maximum number of theatres in India with its total of 943, followed by Andhra Pradesh also in the South, with 668 Theatres. Maharashtra State comes third with 628 theatres, followed by Mysore State with 459 theatres. West Bengal comes next 419 theatres, while Madhya Pradesh claims 332 theatres and Uttar Pradesh 321 theatres. The next important States Kerala and Gujrat have 295 and 241 theatres respectively. Bihar State has 186 theatres, followed by Junjab State with its 170 theatres. While Assam has 114 theatres, Orissa has only 70 theatres. Scattered all over the other minor States of India are about 116 theatres in all.



The total of India's theatres together employ a personnel force of 80,000, and rake in a total of 590 million rupees at the box office every year. Out of this as much as 210 million rupees go towards taxes. There are thus 340 million rupees to be shared between the theatres and distributors. Latter take 60/65% as their share of the net, after taxes. After meeting publicity costs and other expenses, there is very little for the theatre operator.

moment has the "longest" gunfight or fistfight. The drawnout brawl has become routine. Yet the hero often has emerged with unmarked face and unruffled hair. Too many things happen on the Filipino screen that tax credulity. Says an action star: "I feel silly every time I am pitted against three or four big kontrabidas whom I am supposed to lick. In real life, I wouldn't be so foolhardy. I'd make a run for it quicker than you can say life and limb."

EXHIBITION HEALTHY IN SWITZERLAND

But Government Curbs All But 'Necessary Building' As Swiss Economy Deemed 'Overheated'

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Zurich.

Switzerland is probably the only country in Middle Europe whose statistics of film houses do not show a development in the wrong direction, namely backwards. On the contrary: the number of Swiss cinemas has increased by 11 in 1963 to a total of 664 as of Jan. 1, 1964. Zurich, the biggest Swiss city with a population of almost half a million, also has the biggest number of cinemas, 45.

Closings are rare in Switzerland and are usually compensated or even, as in 1963, surpassed by openings of newly built houses, mostly medium-size or smallseaters up to 600-700 seating capactiy. However, it looks as though very few, if any, new openings will be registered this year, due to a recent government edict curtailing building activity to strict necessities, such as hospitals, schools, social buildings etc., for at least one year. This decision was deemed necessary in view of inflation getting out of hand in recent years and the present state of Swiss economy being considered by many, including the government, as "overheated."

About 10% of Swiss cinemas are of the arthouse type, i.e. smallseaters showing mostly arty product or at least "selected" films destined to attract a more discriminating clientele. These smallseaters are believed to show a steadier frequency than larger houses, with less ups and downs in weekly number of patrons.

Total number of distributors in Switzerland is 40, topped in importance as well as actual business by American distribs and/or indie firms handling U.S. product. In the former category are: MGM, United Artists, Universal, Warner Bros., all in Zurich; 20th Fox, Zurich and Geneva. Indie firms are: Starfilm Zurich, handling Paramount product, Vita-Films Geneva (Columbia) and Parkfilm Geneva (Disney).

TV Not Too Heinous

Television hurts some, though not to an alarming degree, especially when a top sports or other topical event is being telecast. This was the case last February when daily telecasts from the Olympic Games in Innsbruck lured many patrons away from cinemas to public restaurants with tv sets. Total number of television subscribers in Switzerland is about 370,000, registering a substantial increase of over 92,000 in 1963 against the year before. This increase, incidentally, is believed to be the highest in one year since Swiss video started in 1953.

Beside television, there are other factors considered even more harmful to film business in Switzerland. These include the rapidly rising motorization, resulting in more people than ever leaving towns over weekends; the fact that many have switched to higher income classes and can now afford to spend large amounts on hobbies and holidays; and the general reduction of working hours in factories and offices, with the five-day week being almost the rule now, allowing an increasing number of prospective cinema patrons to seek other diversions away from home.

On the other hand, this also being directly attributable to the booming Swiss economy, the large amount of foreign workers residing in Switzerland (over 700,000, compared to a total Swiss population of 5,500,000), the majority being Italians, has caused cinemas all over the country to switch to Italian product of the Hercules, Maciste or Zorro type—and thereby nicely increasing their grosses.

Monthly, Not Weekly, Payrolls, Withholding Taxes Curb Films In Otherwise Booming South Africa

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg.

Though maintaining a normal steady level, film business in South Africa did not reflect the country's general economic boom. Such is the opinion of the majority of leading film showmen here, but one major U.S. distributor contends that business did take an upward surge during the last quarter of 1963.

An interesting reason for static conditions put forward by another American distributor is that the public has not yet adjusted to the Government's Pay-As-You-Earn tax system which came into force last year, and that small wage-earners, who make up a large percentage of cinema audiences, have not yet learned to budget salaries now paid for bosses convenience monthly instead of weekly, for the workers' convenience. Result: great b.o. activity during the first week of the month, and a noticeable tail-off from then onwards.

Despite this, the twelve-months since VARIETY's last International Film Edition have seen all South African screen records broken by a picture that opened on April 3, 1963, and was replaced exactly 50 weeks later by "The Wonderful Tale Of The Brothers Grimm." The longruner was MGM's "How The West Was Won," screened in Johannesburg at the Republic's only Cinerama Theatre, and seen by nearly half a million people. "Previous b.o. recordholder—UA's "Around The World In 80 Days"—had a 39-week season in Johannesburg in 1958 at His Majesty's Theatre. "How The West" will be released in all centers throughout the country excepting Johannesburg in the 35m version in May.

MGM's representatives in South Africa celebrated the company's 40th anni with keen sales drives and special releases. Robert Schmitt, who heads this territory, anticipates several prestige pix for the coming months, including "The Prize," to be given day and date release in Johannesburg and Cape Town later this month, and Columbia's "The Cardinal" and "Under The Yum-Yum Tree." Since March, 1960, Columbia pix have been distributed in the Republic by MGM.

United Artists, who last year pulled off first three places in the annual Johannesburg Film Critics Award, inaugurated by the Johanneburg Film Society, were unplaced in the 1964 listings, but did exceptional business with "From Russia With Love" which opened simultaneously in nine centers, including Southern Rhodesia's Salisbury, on Dec. 25, and consolidated the James Bond cult in South Africa. A happy augury, this, for "Goldfinger," due later this year, and also for the anticipated but as yet undated visit to South Africa by Sean Connery and Ian Fleming, planned by the country's 10,000 strong James Bond Club.

Contrasting with its great hit in America UA's "Tom Jones," despite raves from the entire English press here and even more fulsome praise from their Afrikaans colleagues, managed only an unsensational four weeks at this city's 2,279-seater Colosseum Theatre. Puritanical element found Tony Richardson's approach to Fielding's bawdy classic altogether too crude. Nevertheless, "Tom Jones" is almost certain to figure among the top three in the next Film Critics' Award organized by the Johannesburg Film Society.

'Lawrence' Topped In 1963

Winner for 1963 was Columbia's "Lawrence Of Arabia," with "Billy Budd" (Allied Artists), and "To Kill A Mockingbird" (U) as runners up. Other finalists in the short list of seven were "Billy Liar," "David And Lisa," "Divorce Italian Style" and "Hud."

A favourite both with press and public that ran nifty five weeks in Johannesburg at the 2,000-seater 20th Century Theatre was Universal's "Charade."

"Cleopatra" (20th) opened in Johannesburg on Dec. 13, and by the end of March had chalked up 16 weeks at His Majesty's Theatre. Its dialogue was badly criticized here.

Empire Films, distributors of British and Continental product, did well during the year with Britain's "Carry On" comedies, Cliff Richards' "Summer Holiday," and such English-dubbed foreign imports as "Purple Noon," "The Devil And The Ten Commandments" and "Tales Of Paris."

The Republic's newest distributing company, Ster Film Import founded in 1959, benefitted from fine press accorded "David And Lisa." Other Ster pix shown in Johannesburg at the indie Capri include American International's "The Raven," "The Young Racers" and "Beach Party," the Italian comedy "Love And Larceny," and Orson Welles's critically acclaimed film version of Kafka's novel "The Trial."

Greece Playoff of Films, By Flag

Greece.

American-made feature films continue to dominate the screens of the Kingdom of Greece. Taking February, 1964, a cutoff point for a year's tabulation, the playoffs of product, figured by flags, is as follows. (Note that the figure in parenthesis represents firstrun admissions for each nation's group of films.) Herewith the data:

	FILMS	ADMISSIONS
UNITED STATES	129 films	2,586,957
GREECE	55	1,795,049
FRANCE	30	447,733
ITALY	30	392,113

GERMANY	9 "	66,136
OTHER COUNTRIES	7	38,329
SHORT SUBJECTS		173,273
		5,683,996

The great event of this year in the trade was the opening of Cinerama at the Radio City in Athens, which, however, had not the results anticipated, starting with "This Is Cinerama." The second feature released was "The Seven Wonders of the World" which did better. But both audiences and management of the Radio City were awaiting the "How The West Was Won" as a sure grosser.

Films Made In South Africa

Johannesburg.

In 1963 feature films costing more than $7,000,000 were made in the Republic of South Africa and there is every indication that this figure will be exceeded well before the end of the current year. Most important production, made in South Africa, so far released is Joseph E. Levine's "Zulu," which faithfully reproduced the Rorke's Drift setting of its story among the mountains of Natal, and has earned much praise for the authenticity of its treatment under Cy Endfield's direction, and the impressive acting of both English and local cast. "Zulu," like MGM's "Rhino," directed by Ivan Tors and filmed on location in Natal's Umfolozi Game Reserve, was serviced by South African Film Studios. Monarch Films, a subsidiary of this company, participated as coproducers with Richard Todd and London Films in the remake of "Sanders Of The River," shortly to be released.

South African Film Studios, whose 500-acre estate at Lone Hill on the outskirts of Johannesburg is equipped to provide facilities for visiting companies, has several productions lined up for 1964. They include "Table Bay," an adventure story starring Lex Barker, with a shooting schedule that began in January and ended early in March; "D. D. D." to be made by Colin Lesley and filmed, with the cooperation of the De Beers Diamond Corp. in the banned Oranjemund diamond area of South West Africa; "The Williamson Story" recreating the life of Tanganyika's Diamond King, until his death one of the wealthiest—and loneliest—men in the world; several "Father Brown" stories to be made in conjunction with a German company; and another servicing job for Embassy Pix, again with Cy Endfield as director. Associate producer Bob Porter arrived in South Africa mid-March to start the hunt for suitable locations.

An indie effort awaited with interest by local cinema fans impressed by the dedication of two well-known Johannesburg film men, who quit regular jobs in order to devote themselves entirely to a project on which they had previously worked over weekends, is "The Foster Gang." Directed by Percival Rubens and Pierre de Wet, this is the true story of a notorious band of gangsters who terrorized Johannesburg in its eventful mining-camp era of fifty years ago.

Yank Jim Reeves' Pic

Jamie Uys Studios imported American singing star Jim Reeves in 1963 for the musical "Kimberley Jim" which was released here last September. Now in the final stages of shooting is "Dingaka," a story about conflicts between tribal and urban Africans, with emphasis on African music and dancing Uys is directing this opus, while his second-in-command, Emil Nofal will start shooting "The Golden Keel," a modern adventure romance based on a novel by South African author Desmond Bagley later in the year. With locations in the Republic, and also in the Mediterranean and Italy, this will be the first South African pic to shoot sequences overseas.

South African Screen Productions, whose headquarters at Killarney Studios are the home of the second oldest newsreel in the world—The African Mirror, introduced by I. W. Schlesinger in 1913—recently completed two feature pix, "Rider In The Night," a wide-screen production set against the background of the Anglo-Boer War, and the Afrikaans comedy "Piet My Niggie," one of a succession of films immensely popular with country audiences.

Just completed, in coproduction with David Millin-Roscoe Berman Productions is the company's most promising venture to date—"Seven Against The Sun," a story set on the frontier between Kenya and Abyssinia during the last war, and involving a drama-packed mission undertaken by seven South African soldiers and a young nurse inadvertently caught up in their adventure. Pic is based on a play and novel by Johannesburg author James Ambrose Brown. Directed by David Millin, produced by Hymie Kirstein of S. A. Screen Productions, it is intended for the overseas market, and aims to show what can be done in South Africa on an eight weeks' shooting schedule and a budget of less than $200,000.

Scot Cinema Resumes After 3-Week Closure

Lossiemouth, Scotland, April 28.

Signs of a return to cinema-going are seen in this northeast Scotland town. The town's only cinema, The Regal, is to reopen, only three weeks after being shuttered.

The owners, Caledonian Associated Cinemas, say they decided to resume operations "in response to public demand." They warn, however, that the cinema is to operate for an experimental period only, and that, if the public do not patronize it, then the house will shutter for all time.

that he is all but an adherent of the above Oberhausen group.

Oddly enough, some of the most successful German short film makers have nothing to do with that group. This goes for Manfred Durniok, Hans Juergen-Priebe and the aforementioned Hello Weber, to name a few.

Berlin documentary filmmaker Manfred Durniok (30), whose pix walked off with prizes at festivals such as Vancouver, Montreal and Bergamo, said about the Oberhausen manifesto: "I didn't sign it because I want to go my way alone." (Durniok is kept very busy with producing documentaries for tv.)

MOSLEM LANDS LAG AS TO PIX

Turco-Greek Cooperation Dead

Istanbul.

Although the film industry of Turkey makes many features annually (see separate story) there is practically no export market. The other Moslem countries belong to a different world, cinematically, the headquarters of which is Egypt.

Turkey imported Greek films until the strife in Cyprus broke out. By the same token the Turkish minority on that ill-starred island were a market for Turkish films, as in the Kingdom of Greece itself. That is all cancelled by bitterness.

The Cyprus issue has political connotations owing to some 40% of the Greeks on the island being Communist sympathizers. Turkey is in the forefront of the western alliance in facing Soviet Russia. "Cyprus question" has hurt both the Greek and Turkish film industries in several ways. Greek films which had won a considerable following in Turkey over the last couple of years have abruptly stopped being shown, even though there was no official ban on them. First two large-scale, widely advertised Turco-Greek co-productions filmed last summer in Athens and Istanbul, both starring popular Greek and Turkish stars playing together for the first time, are still awaiting release. Even "The Song of the Mediterranean," a Turkish film starring Turkey's number one film actress Belgin Doruk, has not been shown because it was partly filmed in Greece.

Interestingly, 14 Turkish features were exhibited in the State of Israel.

Greece Shoots Over 100 Features For Homeland, Cyprus & 8th Ave.

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

Greece is not a country that distinguishes itself as an important motion picture production center. Although the number of features produced is topping almost all European countries, the majority of them are of scant importance beyond the kingdom of Greece's own borders. There is hardly a parallel to "Never on Sunday," except a few arties presented at various Festivals.

This year the production number will exceed again the 100 mark. But for a kingdom of 8,500,000 people with a language not spoken elsewhere except, say, Cyprus and Eighth Avenue in Manhattan this count seems absurd.

Production costs in Greece are cheap. Most expensive ever produced here did not reach $100,000. Even so, very few cover their negative costs because the Greek audience is fed up with local mediocrity and grows choosey.

Only restriction on production here is that the Censorship Board must approve the screenplay. Censors have no artistic concern, care only if there is something against the orthodox Greek religion, the State, etc. So everyone with a story idea on his mind as soon as he finds someone to finance the production, signs some popular comedians and starts shooting a film as casual as you please. Much of the shooting is done on the spur of the moment, director and the actors improvising.

There are some serious producing companies who hope to make films good enough for foreign markets also. Of these, four are the most important ones: Finos Films, Damaskinos-Michaelides, AnZervos and Roussopoulos Bros-G. Lazarides-D. Sarris-K. Psarras, followed by Kourouniotis Bros-M. Petrolekas N. Sabatacos and James Parris.

Oldest producing company in Athens is the Finos Film, which turns out five or six pictures per year. These are mostly top grossers domestically having, until recently the popular Greek star, Aliki Vouyouklaki. Now that she had signed with Damaskinos-Michaelides, Finos promotes Zoe Laskari.

Th. Damaskinos-V. Michaelides, operating the biggest distribution office in Greece, started producing a few years ago. This year their picture "The Red Lanterns" starring Jenny Karezi, has been nominated for an Academy Award as the best foreign language picture and it has been selected also as the official Greek entry at the Cannes Film Festival.

This company, besides "Red Lanterns" released this year "Heartbeats at a School Desk" with Aliki Voupouklaki which is the top grosser local picture this year, "The Young Rascals," the "She-Driver" with Aliki Vouyouklaki, Alecos Alexandrakis and Maro Contou and a drama "The Girl of Sunday" with Georges Foundas and Xenia Kalogeropoulou.

The AnZervos Studio is also an old company having produced till now many good films. This year had on its release schedule seven films among which "The Little Aphrodites" which had represented local production at the Berlin Film Festival.

Another new company the Roussopoulos Bros-G. Lazarides-D. Sarris-K. Psarras had produced many pictures the last five years that had a good success at the box office. They have their own studio and they were shooting five films per year. But they have ten pictures now on their producing schedule for 1964, the titles of which are: "Vedetta" in color and scope, "In the Sun and In Death" scope, "Boys and Girls" in color and scope, "The Emir and the Poor Man" in scope, "The Iron Gate," "The Rescuers," and "Beethoven and Bouzouki."

Greek Product Export

Athens.

Greek-made feature films with dialogue in that language finds a rental potential of less than $1,000,000 in the United States, ideally the big immigration goal of its citizens.

Data here shows 282 Greek features of recent vintage circulating in 28 countries. Again the films follow the tide of Greek workers. Among the best export points:

United States, West Germany, Australia, Cyprus, United Kingdom, France, Russia, Israel, Turkey, Ethiopia.

Israelis Want Out From Crowded Flats; Result Jams Film Theatres

Tel Aviv.

Fact that no television exists here as yet helps preserve a very high ratio of visits to the cinema. Even the growing number of tv sets, with which people can watch video transmitted through relay stations or directly to neighboring countries, hasn't clipped the film audience. Influx of immigrants, whose foreign tongues delay their visits to the Hebrew-speaking legit theatres, and the crowded housing situation, conspire to drive people to the cinema, both to be entertained and sheerly to get out of their apartments.

There are 260 film theatres in Israel. There is apart from the collective settlements, where films unreel at least once a week, in the community center or the dining hall, costly 16 mm copies of current movies, and excluding army camps, schools and cinema clubs.

SOME BIAS VS. HUMAN 'IMAGE'

Beirut.

Those attending the late 1963 Lebanon Film Festival here in Beirut agreed that this partly-Christian land leads all of the countries of Arabic culture in the matter of film theatres and culture, 61.3 film houses per million population. Of some 23 nations commonly classified as Arabic some 13 are actively interested in film. Of these, Egypt is far and away the most active in production of features, averaging perhaps 40 annually. Turkey is not usually included among the Arab nations, though Moslem. It has a fairly active film producing industry.

It works out that countries with a population of 97,000,000 have relatively small numbers of film theatres. A total of 1,167 hardtop theatres breaks down as 350 for Egypt, 196 in Algeria, 159 in Morrocco, 102 in Tunisia, 35 in Libya, 34 in the Sudan. This is the "African" part of the Moslem world. Add the Near East totals: Lebanon, 97; Iraq, 84; Syria, 30; Jordan, seven; Kuwait, four.

It figures 15 film houses for every million people. The worldwide ratio is 70, the overall European ratio is 160 and the Italian ratio is 350. Italy may be the world's most avid film-going nation.

Notice should be taken, respecting Moslem countries, that there remains in force a considerable prejudice against rendering of the human "image", as a form of vanity forbidden in the Koran.

The Moslem lands of Africa, even so, have notably larger numbers of film exhibition places than the recently emancipated from colonial rule nations.

A further analysis has Lebanon with an annual attendance average per person of 26.5 times while Algeria has 2.7, and the number of places per person is also highest in Lebanon with 3.9. However there are signs of expansion in all countries. Omitted are the figures for Turkey, Algeria, Ivak, Lebanon, Kuwait, Egypt, Morocco and Syria with Tunisia due soon are supplied with television senders. But many neighboring countries can get programs from those that already have it.

There is no sort of video sharing among the Arabs a la Eurovision but there are exchanges of vidfilm. Here again Lebanon has forged ahead with three private channels and commercial aspects with Egypt also going fast in this realm.

Argentino-Italo Film On Latin Festival And Emigrant Generation

By HANS EHRMANN

Buenos Aires, April 28.

The none too happy aftermath of the Buenos Aires Film Festival was marked by two questions: Where should the next Festival be held? Is it really worth while having another one?

There was many a nay to the second of these queries and hardly anyone bothered to bring up the one solid argument for the defense, available right here in Buenos Aires. It is the Italo-Argentine co-production of "An Italian in Argentine," starring Vittorio Gassman, Silvana Pampanini and Amadeo Nazzari and directed by Dino Risi, who previously made "The Easy Life" and "I Mostri."

Risi came to Mar del Plata for the 1963 film fest and returned to Italy with a prize and an idea for a new film. He was tempted by the possibility of a tongue-in-cheek look at (a) goings on at the fest itself and (b) the conduct patterns of Italians who settled down in Argentina many years ago, contrasted with those of the post-war Italians of the economic "boom."

In 1963, Turkey Made 140 Features; Star Salaries 25% Of the Budget; Censorship & Provincials Hurt

By EROL KENT

Istanbul.

The Turkish film industry is slipping—within its own narrow range. The range is indeed low, in everything but the number of films produced annually. During 1962 about 200 feature films were produced. Last year ('63) saw a decline of more than 25% with the number falling to 140. It is predicted that 1964 will show a further slump to perhaps 100 new films. Of course, even an output of 100 films a year is highly impressive on the world chart, putting Turkey with its 25,000,000 population, easily within the dozen or so leading film producing countries, quality-wise. But Turkey's output is impressive only as far as numbers go. When it comes to quality, Turkish films are possibly among the least successful both artistically and commercially.

From the artistic angle they are poor for several reasons: technical facilities are lacking, for instance, all Turkish films are still made with out-dated silent equipment and the sound is later dubbed in. There are half a dozen studios but their technical resources are very limited, furthermore, among the hundreds of men and women who constitute the manpower of the local film industry only a few possess the updated technical know-how, whether it be in script-writing, directing or mere crew work. Another factor which handicaps artistic creation relates to the curious status of the film director. Here he virtually has no authority to create as he pleases. Producers are the absolute authorities. These men cater to the whims and wishes of provincial distributors, since the profitable market for Turkish films lies in the provinces, rather than in the large cities such as Istanbul, Ankara or Izmir.

As a result of the above-described system a vicious circle is created whereby distributors decide what's "commercial" and ask for films which will fit a certain "formula," producers bow to their wishes (frequently drawing advances on scheduled, but as yet unproduced films) and writers, directors, actors etc. must follow producers' orders. Film "formulas" vary from season to season. Recent trends have included Turkey-style "gangster films," films featuring "child stars" (reminiscent of the Shirley Temple, Jane Withers etc. pics of the 1930s) and lately "drawing-room comedies," which Istanbul critics sometimes kiddingly label as "white telephone films."

The fact that this so-called commerical system, is in reality far from being so has gradually become obvious. The market reached saturation point, since almost anyone who had a yen for it and was able to raise the equivalent of $20,000 to $30,000 started to jump on the bandwagon. Also in recent years a veritable "star system" developed. About a dozen male or female stars whose box-office appeals were an established fact started to ask for sums which, although minimal by international standards ($4,000 to $7,000 per film), constituted 25% of a film's budget here. In retaliation producers have recently tried to create a class of "princes" and "princesses" to replace the established "kings" and "queens" of the Turkish cinema. Such countes-measures against the star system is bound to defeat its own purpose, since a "prince" or "princess" who today is willing to work for a fraction of what "kings" and "queens" get, will automatically boost his or her asking salary once established with the public. (It should be noted in passing that the top stars manage somehow to make 10 to 15 feature films within a year).

Answer to the Turkish film industry's present dilema appears to be the emergence of talented directors with enough guts, talent and cash backing to impose their own views on producers. If and when a Turkish director managers to break the folly of the cycle the Turkish film industry may realize its potential.

Another drawback to a freer or more creative approach has been the outdated censorship laws of the country. Even though there is no censorship whatsoever in the theatre (which incidentally is the cinema's most serious boxoffice rival in television-less Turkey), the cinema is severely restricted. Scripts have to be submitted to a board of censors before shooting begins and, once approved, no changes can be made. The finished film is once again viewed by the board. In principle, anything which is considered contrary to the country's "political or moral interests" or which shows the Turkish nation "under a bad light"cannot get by.

U.S. Pix in Mexico Not Co-Production

Mexico City.

Despite the pushing around (see separate account) the Mexican labor leaders and government bureaucrats are given the American film distributors here, the other branch of the American film industry, production, is proceeding with the utmost affability. Indeed the Hollywood unit people who come here to shoot are positively adulating the Mexican crews with which they have dealings. "Among the best in the world," is a sample of the praise.

Of course the producing of feature films in Mexico is a story of many tensions and troubles. The technicians may be fine but stars and others often complain of the drinking water and of the Mexican altitud and other physical whammies.

Generally speaking it makes little sense to describe U.S. features made here as "co-productions." There is little or no financial partnership involved. Here's how co-production works here:

A U.S. producer brings to Mex his script, his bankroll, a couple of administrative people, some stars, a director, and a cameraman. He hires locally, a Mexican director, cameraman, and complete crews. He also uses Mexican feature, bit, and day players, as well as extras. His U.S. designed set is constructed in Mexican studios with 100% Mexican labor. But the film is U.S. and has the standards of American product.

The script is approved by the Mexican Censor. During the filming if the film is processed in Mexico it is reviewed by the censor at the lab. This is a double check to see that the script approved was shot as approved. If the film is to be sent to the U.S. for processing, a censor is on the set to see that the approved script is followed.

Censorship in shooting has no fixed criterion other than caprice. One may not criticize Mexico. One may not show Mexico or Mexicans in a bad light. Hence the turn down of Ponti's filming of "The Children of Sanchez."

Cutting of films imported is more annoying than anything else. Occasionally a film is withdrawn or barred. Usually an offending scene is cut. Last year, for example, the scenes dealing with homosexuality were cut from "Advise and Consent."

Tops among U.S. producers operating in Mexico this year is Jerry Bresler, producing two features in color and Panavision for Columbia release. Ironically neither of these pictures will probably ever be seen here unless Mexican policy changes

ISRAEL: IS A BOOM UNDER WAY?

Much-Frustrated Planning of Past May Be at End—1964 Seems Sure to See Much Production Around Tel Aviv

By AZARIA RAPOPORT

Tel Aviv.

How reliable an index of future film boom is a hotel lobby full of wellknown personages? The question recalls the Excelsior in Rome in recent years and the Hilton in Madrid. Both lobbies buzzed with plots and plotters, later translated into considerable action. Hence one might judge from V.I.P. census in Tel Aviv hotels that Israel was about to burst into production.

The skeptical aspect would lie in Israel having so often heard "promises" which failed to materialize, much in the way Puerto Rico, Jamaica and other areas are serenaded to small net results.

Still it is only human nature that the natives here are impressed by an array of celebrities coming through. Among those recently noted were Daniel Mann, Carl Foreman, George Peppard, Alex Jiffe, Robert Hirsch, Veronique Vandell, Jack Karp, Diane Baker, David Opatoshou, Tom Bell, Paul Stassino.

Not to overlook Herbert Kline, who directed and co-produced "My Father's House" in the then-Palestine, back in 1946. He's now planning "Hill of Hope."

Meanwhile there's a hill of hope, of promises, plans, scripts, negotiations and correspondence, piling up high in government offices and studios.

Before Sophia Loren hits these shores, in late June, for the filming of Daniel Mann's "Gates of Galilee," more than a dozen local and international films are supposedly to be completed and in the can. These certainly represent an increase over last year's crop, consisting mainly of local products which hasn't hit the international market, like "Eldorado," "Eshet Ha'gibor," "Etz o Palestine," "Havoura She'kazot," "Give me Ten Desperate People," "Af Mila Le'Morgenstein," "Rak Be'lira," "Ha'Martef," or the only international feature, shot in Israel, "The Best of Enemies."

Israeli production still aims at the local market, having realized that local patronage can support a fair feature, mainly comedy. Producers say they can recoup locally with a margin of profits, through refunds by the Government of taxes and also encouragement loans.

A few of the pictures in production at the time of this report stand a chance of making the international scene. Among these one could expect the Franco-Israeli production of "Never on Saturday," the American-Israeli production of Alexander Ramati's "Rebels against the Light," "Oulay Terdu Sham" (Come Down There), an Israeli film about kids nursing an old, destitute sailor, or "Daliah Ve'Hamalachim" (Daliah and the Sailors), a local comedy with French Veronique Vandell and most of Israel light entertainment performers as sailors helping the female-stowaway to Israel, or "Salach Shabati," an Israeli production with such American craftsmen as Floyd Crosby behand the cameras.

Other features, being shot, processed, edited or prepared simultaneously in Israel's two studios (Geva Films and IMPS, at Hertzliya), include "Havou Banot Le'ellat," "Mr. Simchon & Son," "Tomorrow's Yesterday" (a semi-documentary, full length feature incorporating some historic scenes taken as early as the 1920's in this country), "Miss Sabina and her Lodgers," "La Maille et La Filet," a Franco-Israeli coproduction to be directed by Phillips Arthuys (with a cast including Francoise Prevost, Michel Auclair, Serge Regianni, Batia Lancet and Gila Almagor), etc.

The demand on local resources, facilities and technical aid, is being made even greater by the routine production of two weekly Newsreels, by the regular production of shorts and documentaries, covering progress in the different fields of activity, instruction films, educational shorts and other shorts intended for showings in Jewish communities abroad and for television in many countries of Europe, showing a growing interest in phases of life in Israel. Among these one should mention items shot recently by Hardy Kruger, for his television show in Europe and one to be shot in May by Michel Legrand, in collaboration with the local A.A.A. Films Company.

Other plans, scheduled for 1964 include—among other films still in different embryonic stages—"Yes, This is My Brother," "I shall go My Way" (two social dramas of local character), "Ha-Ikar Ha'Briyout" (Health above all), an Israeli comedy, "April Buds," U.S.-Israeli co-production planned by Tabor Films, "The Fifth Wheel," an Anglo-Israeli co-production, local comedy, "The Sky's the Limit," another comedy to be co-produced by Raymond Stross, of England and an Israeli company.

Studio space, technical equipment and local assistants and staff, are available, though the present heavy schedule poses some problems for foreign producers wishing to set dates for future shooting. While the studios go out of their way to order missing items, or additional equipment, from Rome or London, to meet their obligations and accommodate producers, they can hardly meet the demand for trained and professional staff, a shortage of which exists and dictates the import of such help from abroad, for specific productions.

Fully detailed and priced catalogs are available to interested parties, on demand, from both Gava Films Ltd. and Israel Motion Picture Studios Ltd., both of Tel Aviv.

Adding impetuosity to the natural attractions (climate, languages and scenic variety within an hour's drive) to interest foreign investors and producers, are the facilities made available by the Israel Government to such people who wish to produce their films here, or join in co-production with local companies.

The office in charge of the "Encouragement of the Israeli Film Industry," under Asher Hirshberg, has authority to offer convenient terms and other facilities to any film recognized as an "Israeli Film," or to any foreign production wishing to use local services, scenery, background or people. According to a law passed by the Knesset, the Committee for the Israeli Film Industry, can approve of a project, or a script, as an Israeli film, or consider a producer worthy of local concessions, thus availing him of the following allowances:

(a) The importation of raw material, in arrangement with a local studio or producer, almost dutyfree. Same applies to equipment and raw materials brought in by foreign companies not coproducing their film with Israelis, provided they take everything out with them upon completion of project.

(b) Loans amounting to 25% of the overall investment in the feature, or in case of a coproduction of the sum invested by the Israeli partners, usually not above the sum of $25,000. This is not final and, like any additional allowances could be increased and is to be decided in each case by the authorities, according to the interest shown by them in luring the producer, or the importance of the film for Israel.

(c) If at least 40% of the future income is going to result from exportation of the film, or 70% of the investment in the film are in foreign currency, the project could be acknowledged as an authorized "Israeli Product," which entails further refunds and concessions. A producer, planning three films, for instance, could claim such refunds also if the overall sums recouped from the three pictures (or invested in them) meet the above conditions.

(d) All assistance would be given such producers, concerning the general setup, laws, arrangements, duty clearings, recommendations to various Government offices for help and cooperation, even at the expense of appointing a special liaison officer.

(e) In case of serious foreign productions, or coproductions, other services and allowances are also available, apart from the tax rebates, the refunds of entertainment duties by local and municipal authorities, which are promised to each such acknowledged "Israeli film."

This Is Mexico—

Mexico City.

Where the Yanks are shut out while Mexican films are doing very nicely indeed in Spanish-language houses in the U.S.A.

Some 22 Mexican films were made prior to the strike of Aug. 1 and some 40 to 52 are in prospect for marketing.

Latest data shows 48 Mex features went to U.S., 74 to Central America, 78 to South America, 26 to Spain, two to Hong Kong.

Set to unreel on the screens of Japan in 1964: 10 Mex pix.

Mexico builds about seven new film theatres a year. Many Mexican theatres have atrocious acoustics and blindness-inducing sight lines.

Admissions being frozen, so are repairs in theatres.

Average house seats around 1,200.

Mexcan exhibition gross is estimated at around $30,000,000 annually.

There are five drive-ins in republic, others licensed to build.

Mexican producers spend from $35,000 for a feature film, with delayed salaries, to around $100,000. Has gone twice that amount with star and color and five week shooting schedule instead of more average three week schedule.

Mexican fans like Doris Day, Cary Grant, Rock Hudson, John Wayne, Anthony Perkins, Sophia Loren, Lawrence Olivier, Alberto Sordi, Victoria De Sica, Vittorio Gassman, Jean Gabin, Jean Paul Belmondo, Brigit Bardot, Alec Guiness, Jack Hawkins, William Holden, Charlton Heston, Richard Beymer, Natalie Wood, Kirk Douglas, Steve Milligan, Peter Sellers, Toshiro Mifune.

They like these Mexicans: Maria Felix, Dolores Del Rio, Ignacio Lopez Tarso, Cantinflas, Pina Pellicer, Pedro Armendariz, Pedro Infante, Jorge Negrete. (Last three are dead, but still among the most popular).

ing the Gassman-Risi vehicles) during the last 16 years took to the idea, but the co-production only became a fact several months later when Gassman toured Buenos Aires with his "Teatro Popular Italiano." Clemente Lococo, a leading distributor, became interested in the venture and Cecchi Gori visited Argentina later in the year, signing the co-production contract with the especially formed "Lococo Films."

Actual shooting began at the end of March and will continue up to approximately the beginning of June. It takes place on location in and around Buenos Aires. Fair Films provides the stars and the raw film, while the Argentines carry the expenses entailed during filming in their country. The Italians will also provide the finished copies of the film. The total cost of pic was estimated at approximately $500,000 by producer Cecchi Gori. Distribution has been shared out by the partners. Lococo will have the rights to Latin America; Fair Films, to Italy and Europe. Any sales of the film outside these areas will go 70% to the Italians and 30% to the Argentines.

Dutch Production

Amsterdam.

CAESAR FILM Newly formed company, headed by Paul Kijzer. Initial production of Caesar Film was a co-production with Ulysse Productions in Paris, "The Nicest Frauds In The World." Dutch part of the film was a sketch, set in Amsterdam, "The Diamond Necklace," written and directed by Roman Polanski, within the lead Nicole Karen, a Godard find. Two productions are now being set up. "Het Loopt De Spui(t)gaten Uit" (It's Outrageous!) is a comedy about a fireman and a pyromaniac, to be directed by actor Paul Cammermans, who already directed a series of teleplays. Second film on Caesar Film's slate is a film to be directed by Frans Weisz, young Dutch filmmaker who attended the Centro Sperimentale di Cinematografica in Rome, and ended up directing one segment of a film in three sketches, "Heroes," for an Italian producer. His first Dutch film is based on a novel by Dutch author Remco Campert, "Life Is Delicious."

CINEUROPE Is financed by Dutch beer baron A. ("Freddy") Heineken. Company started last year with Fons Rademakers production of "Dark Room Of Damocles," retitled "The Spitting Image." For same company Rademakers worked on adaptation of Louis Couperus' "The Silent Power," set against a background of the former Dutch Indies, but as Indonesian Government would not give permission to film, deal fell through. Now Rademakers is working on a script, based on an original idea, that will be filmed this autumn.

CITY FILM Last year's production was a documentary on the life and time of Queen Wilhelmina, "Wederzijds" (Mutual), that was completely financed by City Film as the government refused three requests for subsidy. Producers Hans Keuls and Bobby Roosenboom are now setting up the production of "Plantation Tamarinde" for City Film, based on a play by Keuls. Director has not been named yet.

BERT HAANSTRA After completing his short "Zoo," Haanstra explored the possibilities of making a feature length documentary with the candid camera." Result is "Alleman" (Everybody), 90 minutes of people who do not know they are spied on by the camera. Haanstra tried to see the comical side of life and made a light-hearted film on the Dutchman unobserved. "Alleman," is a tremendous success with the public and one of the few box office hits, Dutch or foreign likewise. Jacques Tati, French filmmaker, saw film, and bought the rights, and is helping Haanstra now to prepare an international version.

VAN DER HORST Since 1956 Herman van der Horst has been working on and off on a documentary about Amsterdam, for which City Council provided about $20,000. Film seems to be ready now. Herman van der Horst may direct his first feature film, "Five Crosses To Eternity" for producer Herman Ilmer.

VAN DER LINDEN Couping the Golden Bear in 1963 in Berlin (for his documentary "Bouwspelement") and the bi-annual Dutch State Film Prize (for his short "Big City Blues"), Charles Huguenot van der Linden is preparing several projects, documentaries for Shell ("Octobervaart") and the N.H.M., as well as a featurette, financed by the government, "Duik Dan!" (Dive!), and is scripting a feature film that has a girls boarding school as a background.

N.F.M. Started in 1960, the Nederlandse Filmproductie Maatschappij has produced two features directed by Fons Rademakers, and two by John Korporaal. 1963 release was Korporaal's "The Rival," a monor psychological thriller, with Henk van Ulzen in title part. No plans are set yet for 1964, but the company keeps busy with making documentaries.

SAPPHIRE Films produced at intervals by Rudy Meyer has always been successes on the home market. "Fanfare" in 1958, "Resistance," directed by Paul Rotha, in 1962. Rury Meyer is now coming up with "Mensen van Morgan" (People of Tomorrow), directed by Kees Brusse, who was assistant to Rotha, and who made a thriller some years ago, "Funfair In The Rain." "People Of Tomorrow" is a full length documentary, set along the lines initialled by the French pic "Hitler, Connais Pas," directed by Bertrand Blier.

Production of Features Survive In Switzerland, But Just Barely

Zurich.

Only two feature films were produced in Switzerland in 1963, an alltime low. In addition, Swiss production company Praesens-Film A. G. Zurich participated in two co-productions, one with Germany, the other with Germany and Spain.

The two all-Swiss films were: (1) "Im Parterre Links" (Ground Floor, Left Door), produced by Gloriafilm A. G. Zurich and directed by Kurt Frueh, with local players and in Swiss dialect. A locally-slanted family comedy-drama about a Zurich streetcar motorman and his family problems. Made in Zurich on a shoestring budget, it took a severe beating from the local press and failed to stir much boxoffice interest. Due to watered-down theme and run-of-the-mill treatment, no export possibilities.—(2) "Der Sittlichkeitsverbrecher" (The Sex Criminal), produced by Praesens and directed by Franz Schnyder, with a cast combining amateur players, members of the Zurich police and legit players from the Zurich Schauspielhaus in cameo roles. An interesting, thematically offbeat semi-documentary feature film based on actual cases from police files. Too uneven artistically to have much of a chance in arties abroad, but might get by with special handling or as companion feature. Released also in Germany, with moderate results, and sold to the U.S.

One of the two coproductions, originally tagged "Das Feuerschiff" (The Fire Ship) and later switched to "Der Ueberfall" (The Raid), was made by Praesens with Fono-Film Hamburg and distributed by Columbia in Germany. Directed by Ladislao Vajda, in German, it stars James Robertson Justice. Drama of a signal ship captain terrorized by three escaped convicts and paying with his life for his refusal to help their escape to Denmark. Despite good critical reaction, notably in Germany, the film flopped at the boxoffice. Export chances appear slim. The second Praesens coproduction, with Germany and Spain, filmed at the Chamartin Studios in Madrid, in German, was: "Ein fast anstaendiges Maedchen" (An Almost Decent Girl). Also directed by Vajda, it stars Swiss actress Lilo Pulver and Germany's Martin Held. A comedy about a vivacious secretary following her boss to Spain, it registered nicely in Germany, but flopped in Switzerland. There is some export value in this one, but probably as a companion feature only, at least as far as the U.S. are concerned.

For 1964, there is only one Swiss project so far. Neue Film A. G. Zurich (Franz Schnyder) will film this summer a popular peasant novel by Swiss 19th century poet, Jeremias Gotthelf, entitled "Geld und Geist" (Money and Spirit), with a (for Switzerland) steep budget of $233,000, in color and widescreen. It will be in Swiss dialect and expected to be released next November. Some of previous Gotthelf filmizations were boxoffice winners in Switzerland.

MEXICO: YANK FILMS, STAY OUT

So, After 40 Years, Is Wechsler A Producer Or a Philosopher?

Zurich.

This is (1964) the 40th anniversary of Switzerland's oldest production company, Praesens-Film A.G. Zurich, founded on March 21, 1924, by Lazar Wechsler. But, ironically, it may have no new films to point up the occasion. Nothing could illustrate more strikingly the state or quandary of the Swiss film production "industry" for some time now. Nary a silver lining is on the horizon as of the immediate future. (See separate report on 1963 production, two—count 'em—features).

Only new Swiss production "announced" for 1964 is by an indie outfit, Franz Schnyder's Neue Film A.G. Zurich, to be distributed by Monopol-Film A.G. Zurich. It is the filmization, in widescreen and color, of a popular novel by 19th century Swiss poet, Jeremias Gotthelf, entitled "Geld und Geist" (Money and Spirit). The expected budget looks steep by Swiss standards: 1,000,000 Swiss francs ($233,000). But financing has been secured by way of financial participation by the canton (state) of Berne, where all Gotthelf novels are located, as well as by the association of Swiss provincial and smalltown cinemas which agreed to contribute important funds as a sort of goodwill gesture to the ailing Swiss film industry. Risk guarantees are also expected from the Swiss federal government. Shooting of "Geld und Geist" will take place in June-July, and a November release is anticipated.

Survival Potential

What are the chances of survival for a company like Praesens whose present situation looks bleak and whose future outlook must be termed at least uncertain? According to Praesens exec, Max Dora, following in the footsteps of Wechsler who, for reasons of health and age (he's almost 70), is restricting his activities more and more to an advisory capacity beside still being on Praesen's board of directors, there are two possibilities: (1) A growing consciousness of the as yet largely untapped (in Switzerland) potential of television film production. But here again, several obstacles must be overcome, such as lacking studio facilities as the new Swiss film studio, blueprinted for years, still hasn't materialized; and financial difficulties as TV films cannot be expected to be profitable from Swiss showings alone. Two Swiss outfits are currently making telefilms, both located in Zurich: Montana-Film, mostly on commission from the Swiss television, and Condor-Film (Heinrich Fueter), co-productions with Germany and Austria, with split financing and showings in all three countries.

(2) Praesens will continue to take part in co-productions of theatrical films with other countries, but it cannot afford to be merely a "silent partner" with financial stakes in a certain production. Getting distribution rights for Switzerland is a must, and if this proves insufficient to recoup their investment or, better still, make a profit, efforts will be made in future deals to secure an adequate percentage of foreign grosses, depending, of course, on the size of Praesens' investment. That participation deals are not always the answer, however, even if Swiss distrib rights are involved, was experienced by Praesens last year when "Das Feuerschiff" (The Fire Ship), later tagged "Der Ueberfall" (The Raid), a Ladislao Vajda-directed co-production with Fono-Film Hamburg and distributed by Columbia in Germany, proved a financial dud both here and in Germany despite good press reaction. Another Vajda film starring Swiss actress Lilo Pulver, "Ein fast anstaendiges Maedchen" (An Almost Decent Girl), a German-Spanish-Swiss job filmed in Spain, fared somewhat better.

An Undiminished Theatre Building Boom in Greece

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

Although everyone is aware that television will invade this country in a couple of years, new theatres are being constructed constantly all over Greece. People outside of the trade seeing the cinemas packed on Sundays or on holidays think that this business is really a jackpot and as soon as they find a suitable lot they erect a new theatre. Outsiders are commonly believed to have financed most of the new theatres built these last years.

Some 42 first run "winter" theatres are operating this year in Athens against 15 a decade ago. One new first run was added to the list last year, the Aello, plus 11 second and consecutive runs, namely, the Kolosseon, Athenee, Amalia, Astoria, Galaxias, Elite, Aeas, Perroquet, Amore, Prometheus, and Daphne. Three more have been constructed also in the outskirts of Athens, the Achilleon, in Salamis, Amaryssia in Maroussi and Anoixis in Haedari.

In Pireaus, the second key city of Greece, two new cinemas have been built in the centre of the town, the Piraeki and Saronicos and three others in suburbs, the Astron in Korydalos, the Alpha and Katia in Nikea.

In Salonica, the third key city of this country, which is the capital of the North, two first run theatres opened their doors this year. The Aello and Navarinon and one of second run, the Electra.

New film theatres have been constructed also this year in many other towns of Greece, as in Naflion, Tripolis, Volos, Herakleon, etc. Totally more than thirty-five new theatres have operated this winter, a number equals that of the previous season.

Feature films remain the main source of entertainment of the Greek public but in a country of such proportions and possibilities this constantly increasing number of theatres can only lead to ultimate economic trouble.

Current attendance does not differ practically from year before. The total number of realized admissions till the end of February in the three key cities of Greece and their suburbs is 37,868,695 against the 33,863,960 of the corresponding period of last year. There is a slight increase of course at first sight but it is not a substantial one considering that the season had started early this year and the number of the days of operation greater.

The breakdown of the admissions realized by each of the key cities is as follows:

ATHENS

1st run	5,683,996
2nd run	891,989
Consec. run	3,484,485
Suburbs	4,930,607	14,991,077

PIREAUS

IT'S TODA, NADA FOR U.S. IN '64

By CHARLES LUCAS

Mexico City.

Crisis-ridden Mexican motion picture industry creates a perennial image of little Eva jumping from crisis to crisis. A few in the industry ignore the chronic disorders and continue their efforts to turn out pictures of quality and commercial success. Even the Sindicato of Guilds in the industry has entered the production ranks in an effort to pull the ailing industry up by the boot straps.

Mexico has moved steadily toward nationalization. Yet it has wanted to retain the advantages of private industry. It has thus far failed to do either. Perhaps this built-in schizophrenia accounts for the constant rash of financial difficulties and confused thinking. Here's how this works.

In production the Actors, Authors and Writers, Directors, and Technicians form "the" Sindicato. This is headed by Jorge Duran Chavez. On Aug. 1 last, he led his several unions out in a general industry strike. The result was a national disaster. Production stopped, and did not resume until January of 1964.

The Government prohibited the strike on Aug. 31. It was clearly a failure, doomed from the start. Demands were unrealistic, indeed daydreamy. Seeking a face-saver promises were made in September to work out new formula for the industry. This would retire the aged workers from the industry, and at the same time establish a guarantee of five to six pictures in production at all times. Worthy goals lacking only the means. Producers have not provided a retirement fund for Mexico's old actors and technicians, and union membership meanwhile is closed to newcomers.

To further muddy the waters, Mexico's Dept. of Commerce and Industry issued an edict to force all lab printing of imported films to be done locally.

Disney, who releases through the J. Arthur Rank organization here, has features in release and new imports coming in. But MGM, 20th Century-Fox, Warners, Columbia, Allied Artists, United Artists, and Universal have maintained a solid front pending the outcome of the compulsory lab edict.

National Chamber of Commerce of the Motion Picture Industry and various independent distributors and exhibitors filed an appeal asking the Federal Courts to set aside the ruling. In late January of this year, a Federal Court declared the edict unconstitutional. Undaunted, the Ministry of Commerce and Industry appealed the verdict to the Supreme Court of Mexico. In accepting the appeal the Supreme Court ruled only that the film Industry was properly the province of the Ministry of Gobernacion (Interior) and not the Dept. of Commerce and Industry, which caused all the trouble. The snafu is currently locked in this bureaucratic tug-of-war. Substance of the ruling has not yet been touched upon. It will probably be June or July before there is adjudication.

Absolutely breath-taking to the Americans, not unaccustomed to extreme labor union demands in their own land, was the demand of the Mexican crafts that exchange employes reaching retirement must continue on full salary for life, but—and not this refinement—the wage should be paid not to the individual but to the union. Americans have not been able to decide whether this rule was "serious" or part of a deliberate campaign to cause U.S. companies to withdraw in disgust from Mexico.

Meantime the yanques are frozen out of the Mexican market. The loss in keenly felt. Usually U.S. companies take about 66% of all foreign rentals. In 1964 this

South Africa's Film Critics: Prestige, Yes; Influence, Maybe

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg.

Status of the South African film critic has never been so high. In most cases he is a senior journalist and combines films with drama (and sometimes music). Quotation makes him a personality. Actually an annual gathering of critics hosted by the Johannesburg Film Society to vote for the "best picture of the year" is covered by newsreel cameras.

But despite this notable prestige, film notices don't wield the same influence at the box office as drama criticism. Practically no stage production can survive a concerted attack from the men on the aisle, but many screen offerings go on against pans to healthy biz. Are legit fans more literate?

The only newspaper with nationwide circulation, the Sunday Times (Johannesburg) is said to reach half the whites in the country, plus many Africans and Coloureds. It carries a page devoted to stage and screen with reviews usually by novelist-playwright James Ambrose Brown, whose "Seven Against The Sun" is currently being filmed here in coproduction between David Millin-Roscoe Berman Productions and South African Screen Productions. Owing to ill health, Brown has recently been off this stint, and colleagues from the sister publication Rand Daily Mail have taken over.

Most respected and dreaded of all Johannesburg critics is bearded Oliver Walker (The Star), whose acid-drip pen also makes him the most quoted. Walker covers films, drama and music, assisted by Bill Edgson, who is younger and not so classically slanted. Film notices in The Star are usually in good position at top of the page with eye-catching two-column headlines.

Even a la Luce

Covering cinema for the Johannesburg morning Rand Daily Mail is Dora Sowden, whose husband Lewis does the same job for drama. Mrs. Sowden also adds music to her portfolio. Rand Daily Mail has fewer pages than The Star, but devotes almost the same amount of space to films.

Sunday Express (also Johannesburg) contains reviews by Tom Russell, but restricted space often reduces notices to a couple of inches.

Latest weekend publication in same city is The Sunday Chronicle which first appeared on the streets this month (April). Geared to higher intellectual standards this is too young yet to have made much impact.

News Check, on Time Magazine pattern, gives regular reviews in its Entertainment Section, but only of selected releases. Critic is Robert Hodgins (also assitant editor) but in conformity with the paper's general policy a la Luce, notices are unsigned.

Large Jewish community supports two weeklies, Zionist Record and South African Jewish Times, both carying appraisals of current screen fare. Henry Katzew writes for the Record, and playwright Bernard Sachs for the Times.

Both Cape Town's English-language dailies, The Cape Argus and The Cape Times, publish regular film reviews, much on the same format as their affiliated newspapers in Johannesburg, but there are no Sunday publications.

Durban's Sunday Tribune enjoys a wide sale and includes good pic coverage, also the two English-language dailies.

Critics in the Afrikaans Press are, generally, less severe in their judgments than their English counterparts. Among the best known is Pieter Serfontein of Johannesburg's Transvaler. Afrikaans-speaking cinemagoers form a worthwhile segment of the audience, especially in country areas. With the exception of a few locally-produced films, product is presented with original English-language soundtracks.

Film distributors quizzed had varied assessments of the power of all reviewers, though agreed that they could not be ignored. Some film men said "critics" should not pass personal opinions, but merely give readers some idea of the story, locale, etc. Other film men complained that critics expose to much of the story line. Interesting point, endorsed by all, is that a whole sheaf of rave notices will not lure the public to a pic it doesn't fancy. (The Greek film "Electra," lauded by every writer lasted one week in Johannesburg).

No Easy Answer For Film Setup In South Africa

Johannesburg.

Republic of South Africa's interest in the considerable strides made in film production here over the past few years has resulted in the formation of a National Film Board. Responding to a directive from the Government, a comprehensive report has just been issued by the Board of Trade following its investigation into the promotion of the motion picture industry.

One of the main functions of the Board, which began operations this April under the chairmanship of F. J. de Villiers, is to coordinate the film-making and photographic activities of all State departments. From now on the Board will be responsible for the making of all documentaries for showing both in South Africa and abroad, for educational films for local consumption, and for television shorts for overseas viewers. A staff of over 100 directors, technicians and administrative workers has been engaged.

About 30 titles are envisaged for the first year of production, and any assignments that cannot be handled by the film board will be farmed out to established indie companies. It is estimated that during the first year about $210,000 worth of business will be distributed among private companies in this way.

Board of Trade's summary is a thorough, lucid and concise survey, clearly setting out both the pros and cons affecting future development. Board reiterates its conviction that the establishment of a motion picture industry is of importance to South Africa but that the domestic market is too limited to support regular production of features on a scale and of a standard comparable to that of the imported product.

There is, and for some time likely to be, a lack of experienced producers, directors and technicians. Studio and laboratory facilities are still relatively restricted. The distance from world centers of film activity is another handicap. Nevertheless, the Board comments on the great mobility of production in jet age.

Risks involved in production, and the necessity for careful planning and cost control, is underlined. "State intervention and assistance have played a part in protecting and fostering film production in many countries" continues the report It is suggested that the rendering of financial assistance should be entrusted to the Industrial Development Corp. of South Africa, and that a sum of $2,100,000 should be placed at its disposal, of which $1,400,000 should be for the financing of the production of feature films by South African concerns, either independently or in co-production with overseas interests.

Finally, the Board recommends that the possibilities of a training scheme for technicians be explored, also the possibility of sending trainees from South Africa to studios abroad for specific periods.

will be, at best, around 10% based on current release of the 55 films in Mexico prior to the General Strike.

It should be added that just after the General Strike started, the STIC (Sindicato Trabajadores Industria Cinemotografia) separately struck the MPEA. Some 86 days later they settled on the basis of the counter proposal (covering exchange workers) originally offered by MPEA at the time of the strike. The MPEA acted as one unit throughout both the laboratory and the Film Row squabbles. MPEA head here is Robert Corkery, who recognized both threats as ruinous to U.S. distribs, both here and in Latin America.

Loaded Up O'Seas

During the strike, to compound the problem further, the nationalized Distribution, and Exhibition chain Operadora de Teatros contracted for about 150 European imports — mostly Italian and French, with some German, Spanish, and British thrown in—to fill the void created by the "freeze-out" of U.S. product. Result is a booking jam in theatres—even if U.S. product could be admitted.

By this writer's count there are 109 houses in the Federal District (Mexico City) of 6,000,000 population. Five houses closed in January because of an admitted inability to meet their costs.

Average ticket price in Mexico is 2.90 pesos or about 23c U.S. value per admission. Absolute top allowed is 32c. Admissions in circuits run around three pesos down to 75 centavos.

Exempted are 70m widescreen features. In this case the admission price is eight pesos. Such houses exist in Mexico City, Acapulco, Guadalajara, Monterrey, Torreon, Mazatlan, Tampico, and Veracruz.

Recently U.S. distributors enjoyed 50% of the Mexican screen. About half of the rentals came from the Federal District. Some 65-million tickets were sold in 1963. American product received a revenue of 190 million pesos or $16,200,000 U.S. dollars. In 1962 the revenue was 232 million pesos or $18,560,000 U.S. dollars.

Part of the loss of Mexico City revenue was offset by distribution in the 29 states and two territories of Mexico where the distribution strike was without effect.

NBC: (N)inety (B)ristol (C)ourt

If NBC should at some time in the future also spell out "Ninety Bristol Court" it won't be entirely by accident. A lot, of course, will depend on the success of next season's three back-to-back Monday night half-hour entries under the Universal Studio (ne Revue) umbrella title of "90 Bristol Court."

As conceived by Jennings Lang, the new senior v.p. in charge of tv production for MCA's Universal City Studios as one of his major enterprises over the past three years while functioning as creative head and executive in charge of program development, the pattern and concept of "90 Bristol Court" will permit a flexibility from which could flow a succession of tv series and programming projects for future incorporation in the NBC schedule. This is being implemented by an NBC-authorized developmental fund.

For example, the initial three half-hours being integrated into "90 Bristol Court" are "Karen," "Tom, Dick & Mary" and "Harris Against the World." Under the unique Lang pattern, any or all of the three could be switched to another part of the NBC spectrum or substituted, depending on their success or failure potential, with new entries meanwhile being developed to round out the trio of integrated entries. It thus puts "90 Bristol Court" in the unique position of serving as a springboard for a multiplicity of NBC spinoffs. Even going beyond that, Lang foresees the possibility of utilizing other Universal-berthed talents, such as a Jack Benny, in some of the "Court" episodes as a testing ground to permit stars to spread their tv wings.

Lang's major concern at the moment as new chief of tv production (he was in N.Y. last week for huddles with the Gotham-based MCA execs prior to departure for Europe) is to rid the company of its old corporate image as a sales factory and to impress the industry with its new creative initiative in the area of production. Thus the whole tv studio is being segmented into key creative groups (helmed by the Miller Huggines, the Dick Bergs, the Ed Montaignes, et al., plus a whole new flock of creative production elements) to satisfy even the most exacting demands of a Jim Aubrey.

With 11½ hours of network programming going for it in '64-'65 (including responsibility for programming practically a third of NBC's prime time hours), thus giving it far and away the No. 1 status among all the Hollywood producers, Universal, says Lang, has already embarked on '65-'66 toward initiating some 25 active new projects. It has no intention of yielding its topdog status to anyone else.

Chi's Kup Takes Swipe at 'Boss' Tom Moore for Sports Proposal

Chicago, April 28.

Irv Kupcinet, who collects one of his paychecks at the ABC-TV o&o, WBKB, acknowledged his insubordination last week when he took stern issue with network prexy Tom Moore's proposals for the alteration of sporting events to fit television's own needs. Speaking to the Chicago Station Reps Assn. at its annual Timebuyer of the Year luncheon, Kupcinet warned that sports are in danger of being ruined by television both through overexposure and through the medium's encroachments on the conduct of the games.

The Sun-Times columnist and tv-radio personality cited boxing as one sport that tv has already killed with the kindness of overexposure, fostering mediocrity in the game because the boxing clubs couldn't develop good new talent fast enough to meet the heavy demands of television. Wrestling and bowling too were popularized by the medium and then dropped because the public had become over-sated, Kupcinet said. And now golf and football are facing the same problem.

Himself a former football player, field official and sportswriter who keeps a hand in it still as the colorcaster on WGN Radio's broadcasts of the Chicago Bears games, Kupcinet deplores the three networks' sudden overzealousness

'Made in America' Quickie Casualty

Dubious distinction of having one of the shortest runs of the season goes to "Made in America," the half-hour game show slotted on CBS-TV Sunday nights at 9.

"Made in America," coproduced by Metro TV and Steve Carlin Productions, was put on the web schedule April 5, filling half the time formerly occupied by Judy Garland. The quiz-game show keyed to guessing Mr. Millionaire will go off the air in about another three weeks.

New show to fill the time period has yet to be selected.

NBC Politico Coin

NBC-TV's extensive coverage of the political scene this summer and fall, which is selling for a base rate of under $10,000 a minute, has snared another sponsor.

Hartford Insurance Group has bought into nine pre-election specials this fall, beginning Sept. 12 and running each week through Nov. 1. Shows will cover the campaigns of the presidential and vice-presidential candidates and prominent races for Congress and various governorships. Hartford order was placed through McCann-Marschalk agency.

BBC-2 in Belated Preem Wins Okay Audience Reaction

London, April 28.

This city now has a three network rating sweepstakes. BBC-2, the U.K.'s first uhf station, joined in the race for the plum London audience in direct competition with its sister web, BBC-1, and the commercial tv channel, both of which are operating in VHF.

Following a disastrous candlelight and curses start on April 20, when a main power failure blacked out half the capital, the web blew out the candles the following night (Tues.) and triumphantly screened to a estimated audience of 1,260,000 Londoners.

Though no one would have wished such a frustrating start on the web—indie boss John McMillan even offered to help out—the resultant frontpage headlines together with the following day's banners served in some measure to compensate for the disaster which, in no event, could have been anticipated.

BBC-2 program topper Michael Peacock subsequently reshuffled his opening week lineup, shifting his Monday sked to Tuesday and his Tuesday block—the educational "Tuesday Term"—to Sunday after-

CLIENT STALL-IN HURTS NETWORKS

By GEORGE ROSEN

The ABC-TV invitation to over 1,000 agency and advertiser execs for coffee, donuts and Nielsens at its New York studios tomorrow morning (Thurs.) was motivated by fan more than a friendly desire for a network-Madison Ave. "coffee break."

With the 1964-65 program season little more than four months away from its debut, it represents a plea to give next season's ABC prime time offerings a better "sponsorship break." As such, it focusses advertiser-agency attention not only on ABC's sales plight but the unexpected difficulties and resistances that have plagued the other webs as well.

The networks, baffled by the growth in their "sponsorship unemployment" rate which has run counter to a "Soaring Sixties" economy, are now bestirring themselves with more aggressive selling and realistically realigned rates.

In addition to many programs of which large portions remain unsold (such as "Ben Casey," "Lassie" and "Kentucky Kid") 10 major entries remain completely or virtually unsold:

Wagon Train	ABC
Outer Limits	ABC
Jimmy Dean	ABC
Jonny Quest	ABC
Adams & Evil	ABC
Mickey	ABC
Hootenanny	ABC
Daniel Boone	NBC
Wm. Bendix-Raye	CBS
CBS Reports	CBS

Of the seven ABC shows, only "Jonny Quest" has as much as one minute sold—a minute a week to Pepsi-Cola for 13 weeks at a 50% discount. "Daniel Boone" on NBC is completely sustaining, as of now, save for some scattered fall minutes to Union Carbide for its seasonally promoted anti-freeze.

CBS' Bendix-Martha Raye comedy, which is still "iffy" Sundays 9:30 to 10 p.m., has drawn no sponsorship blood. And now that Traveler's Insurance has elected not to continue in "CBS Reports," the latter is wholly unsold.

Traveler's defection constitutes a case history illustrating a major reason for the current soft network market. Traveler's, like other major exhibitors at the New York World's Fair, found that its Flushing Meadows investment would vastly exceed previous estimates and was thus forced to curtain and/or cancel other advertising schedules. Ditto Ford and Eastman Kodak, now seeking to sell off large portions of next year's network commitments in "Hazel" and "Disney's Wonderful World of Color," etc.

As a matter of fact, the network managements are only now waking up to the fact that Robert Moses, as the ace salesman to advertisers now extant, has literally stripped their available budgets by many millions of dollars over the two years of the Fair.

General Electric and DuPont, who cancelled their CBS and NBC exclusively sponsored Sunday night shows—after years of steady network patronage—are examples of the long list of advertisers (including Johnson's Wax, Scott Paper down to the smaller advertisers such as Sunbeam), that have cancelled or curtailed many millions of dollars that otherwise would have been earmarked for network television.

In addition, of course, the Fair has thus diverted from tv what otherwise would have been the normal growth of billings from other leading advertisers such as General Motors (with its $50,000,000 exhibition hall), Chrysler ($30,000,000 Fair investment), Coca-Cola, Pepsi-Cola, Borden's,

CBS-TV Sets NFL Championship Game Price Tag: 120G a Minute

CBS-TV, if it is to break even on the championship games of the National Football League, must sell its pre and post-game half-hour shows.

This became apparent as the price tags for the two NFL championship games were circulated along Madison Ave. If a sponsor goes for a two-year deal, the period for which CBS-TV secured the championship rights, the gross price per minute will be $110,000. Same minute, under a one-year agreement, would be $120,000 again a gross price. There will be 19 commercial minutes in each of the NFL championship games.

First crack was given to the national sponsors of the NFL schedule of games on CBS-TV, Ford and Philip Morris. They will have first refusal. Then, the pitch will be made to other national and regional sponsors.

The $110,000 to $120,000 per minute is a record price to a sponsor and compares with from $60,000 to $62,000 per minute for one-minute sponsorship of the regular schedule of NFL games on CBS-TV.

CBS-TV, however, which paid the record price of $1,800,000 per NFL championship game, under the $110,000 gross price per minute price scale, couldn't possibly come out even.

Assuming all 19 minutes were sold at $110,000, that would bring in gross revenues of $2,090,000. Taking the standard 15% agency deduction, that brings the gross revenues to the network to $1,776,500, that's $23,500 less than what was paid for the game and doesn't take into consideration pick-up costs of the web and time payments by the web to affils.

Only way the web can recover its costs, and perhaps earn a small profit, is selling out the post and pre-game shows to be built around the championship contests. Of consequence, too, which can't be calculated as closely as the price schedule for the games, is that the once-a-year event is the top prestige, audience winning sports event of the year.

59,000,000 Fair Viewers

NBC-TV's 90-minute special on the New York World's Fair opening last week pulled a whopping 33 rating for 56% share of audience in the National Arbitron overnights for Wednesday, April 22.

NBC researchers estimated the total audience for the Fair special at 59,000,000 viewers—14,000,000 more people than attended the two-year New York World's Fair of 1939-'40.

Against NBC, CBS' "Chronicle" and "Suspense" pulled a 6.3 rating for 11 share, while ABC's Ozzie, Patty Duke and "Farmer's Daughter" pulled a 14.7 for 25 share.

Ed McMahon As 'Tonight's' Latest 'Hot 2d Banana'

There's nothing like that "Tonight" exposure to put a personality in the six-figure salary class. Like his predecessor, Hugh Downs, NBC-TV's "Tonight" announcer under Johnny Carson, helming Ed McMahon, has become a hot tv property.

McMahon was washed out of his own show, the Goodson-Todman quizzer, "Missing Links") when it moved recently from NBC to ABC, but he's got another of those in the works with the production team of Alan King and Nat Hiken. A national sponsor has the team's show, "Who Me?" and McMahon has handled emcee chores for the pilot and dry-runs. Based on questioning celeb and John Q contestants on their past, the show appears to have a good chance for start next January as a prime-timer.

Also negotiating with McMahon for a daytime vehicle is the new Art Linkletter productions company, which has two or three projects in mind.

As second banana on the "Tonight" show, McMahon has handled the pitches for more than 100 products, represented by 55 different ad agencies. This has lead to a number of industrial and promotional film chores, and plenty of current voice-over work on the national spot scene. He's the voice on the current Vitalis campaign, and is doing both radio and tv for General Motors.

McMahon, who has been 20 years in show biz building up to the current peak, doesn't figure the broadcast scene is really keeping him busy enough. Beginning June 1, he'll do two weeks in the straw circuit Paramas Mall ("Anniversary Waltz"), with other offers currently in from the Kenley Playhouse in Warren, O., where he worked in stock last year, and Palm Beach.

Palladium TV Show & 'Beverly Hillbillies' Trounce BBC's 'Hamlet'

London, April 28.

BBC-TV's 170-minute production of "Hamlet," shot at Kronborg Castle, Elsinore, with Christopher Plummer in the title role, was unfurled in two parts on Sunday April 19 for well under 1,000,000 homes with a choice of both channels, according to TAM, Britain's indie rating service.

Against the "standard" opposition of Associated Television's Palladium show, the Sunday play and in London "Beverly Hillbillies," the Shakespearean show scored ratings of 7 and 6. Palladium, meantime, racked up its highest ever audience. Its star, Frank Ifield, was seen in 9,696,000 homes, a rating of 74. The play "The Close Prisoner" and "Hillbillies" also scored resounding rating points.

Bell Drops Beef, Settles for Tues.

NBC-TV and Bell Telephone, via N. W. Ayer agency, have straightened out their differences on the scheduling of the "Telephone Hour" for next season, and the musical entry will share the 10 to 11 p.m. Tuesday night slot with the web's actualities.

Bell had tried to line up an earlier time with the Sunday 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. considered. "Profiles in Courage," however, the Robert Saudek series based on the book of the same title by the late President Kennedy, stands pat in the time.

The Saudek series, which the network wanted to dump after the assassination of President Kennedy (with the producer holding the web firm to the contract) is in full production with rough cuts of three or four shows already in. Quality of stuff seen so far has raised web program exec's hopes for success of "Profiles."

'STEPTOE & SON' AS U.S. ENTRY ON NBC?

NBC-TV has initiated a step deal to develop the British hit, "Steptoe & Son" in an American version for possible airing in the '65-'66 season. Deal is with Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures, which has American rights to the series.

Comedy based on the doings of a couple of junk dealers had an American preview last week (Fri.) on the Jack Paar show. Script for the American adaptation is now in the works.

Major Upgrading of Political Status for TV in Great Britain

By HAROLD MYERS

London, April 28.

As a result of a drastic change in Government policy, British television has acquired firstclass political status. This new social upgrading, which started last year with the appointment of Lord Hill as chairman of the Independent Television Authority, was completed earlier in the month when Lord Normanbrook was named chairman of the BBC board of governors.

These two appointments have a significance which cannot be measured in conventional terms, and which may prove to have a major influence on the policies of both networks. Before his elevation to the peerage, Lord Hill was an influential Tory M.P. who held several Governmental posts, including that of Postmaster General, the department which is responsible to Parliament for broadcasting affairs. He therefore moved into his top echelon post with an unrivalled background knowledge of the legislative mechanics of broadcasting. By comparison, Lord Normanbrook is a newcomer to the field of television, but has for many years exercised a powerful behind the scenes influence in political affairs. For about 15 years he was secretary to the Cabinet and therefore privy to all the top-level State secrets and policies.

It has already been suggested that these two appointments have curtailed some of the influence wielded by the directors—general of each of the two organizations. One commentator has already suggested that under the previous regimes the chairman played the role of monarch and the d.g.s. were Prime Ministers. The balance of power, it was suggested, has now been shifted and the Prime Ministerial roles are filled by the two chairman with the director-generals reduced to the status of principal secretaries.

While that observation may not be entirely accurate, it does sharply reflect the switch in power. It is common knowledge in the trade that Lord Hill has made his parttime appointment as chairman into virtually a fulltime occupation, and has played an unusually active role, not only in policy-making, but on top-level administrative affairs. Lord Normanbrook has yet to make an official start to his duties, but the widespread feeling is that he will match his opposite number at the ITA in activity and influence.

Broadcasters in both camps remain uncertain whether the realignment of power will be a boon or otherwise. There is a feeling among influential and controversial creative talent that these new moves could lead to more stringent restrictions of program content. There have, in recent weeks, been a number of cases in which program companies have come into open conflict with the authorities. In one case, one of

DOCUMENTARY UNIT DROPPED BY 20TH-TV

Hollywood, April 28.

Documentary division of 20th-Fox TV, in operation for one year, has been shuttered. Malvin Wald and Jesse Sandler, who headed the division, departed the Westwood lot on Friday.

Studio was unable to sell any documentary projects during the year the branch was in existence, but is still trying to peddle some in syndication.

A studio spokesman attributed the lack of sales to the "virtual monopoly" held by the networks in this field.

Murrow, Collins, Sevareid, Stanton Peabody Winners

Four of the tv network George Foster Peabody Awards for '63 were won by CBS-TV; two by NBC-TV; and one by ABC-TV. The awards for radio, as well as tv, on the station and network levels, will be presented formally at today's (Wed.) luncheon meeting of the Broadcast Pioneers.

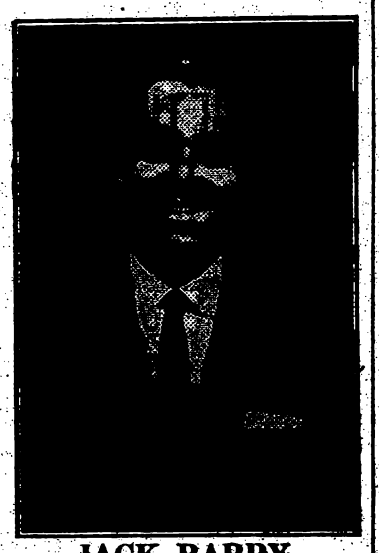
A special award was granted to Gov. LeRoy Collins, National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy. "Voice of America" and Edward R. Murrow, former director of the United States Information Agency, under whose auspicies the "Voice of America" is operated, won an award for radio contribution to international understanding.

In the category of tv entertainment, Peabody winners were "Danny Kaye Show" on CBS-TV, and "Mr. Novak" on NBC-TV. Under the heading of television education, a Peabody was given to NBC-TV for "American Revolution '63," the three-hour documentary on the Negro civil rights movement in the U.S.

In the category of television contribution to international understanding, a Peabody was granted to CBS-TV's "Town Meeting of the World," and CBS prexy Frank Stanton who first publicly announced idea.

In the field of television education, ABC-TV's "Saga of Western Man" won a Peabody. "CBS Reports: Storm over the Supreme Court" won a Peabody for television public service. Eric Sevareid of CBS News won a Peabody for tv news commentary.

On the local level, "The Dorothy Gordon Forum" on WNBC-TV, won in the television youth programs category. In the tv children program category, "Treetop House," WGN-TV, Chicago, won a Peabody. WLW, Cincinnati, won an award for radio education. KSTP, Minneapolis, won an award for radio public service.



In radio networking, "Sunday Night Monitor" on NBC was granted a Peabody for radio news.

Tap Whorf for 'Mickey'

Hollywood, April 28.

Richard Whorf has been signed to direct Selmur Productions' "Mickey," preeming in the ABC-TV fall sked in the Friday at 9 p.m. slot. Mickey Rooney stars.

Whorf has directed "Beverly Hillbillies" the past two seasons.

David Brinkley: 'TV May Be Lousy But It's Always on Time'

Chapel Hill, N.C., April 28.

David Brinkley spoke here at a University of North Carolina symposium last week and fielded queries on whether or not he is a "superstar" or "performer," controlled by Madison Ave. executives and surrounded by news writers who hand him his material ready to be read over the air each night.

Said Brinkley: "I am not a superstar or any of these other silly names. I am a reporter and never wanted to be anything else . . ."

". . . we make a concession to sponsors at times. If we had a story on lung cancer, for instance, we would tell our cigaret sponsor in time for him to drop his commercial if he wanted to—but he'd still have to pay for it . .

"Every newscaster of any consequence at any network writes his own news. Nothing is handed to him ready-made."

These are some of his comments:

"Most people who turn on their tv sets expect to get pablum," Brinkley said, commenting on public reactions to some of his documentary specials.

"Most of the stuff on television is bland. When people turn on their set and find hell-raising and noise such as we had on our show about Reno and the divorce mills people don't like it. They react severely toward me and we lose sponsors and get lawsuits. But we have sponsors lined up and have freedom to be honest.

Asked about the difficulties of network broadcasting, he said, "Television is the only thing in the world that is punctual."

People, planes and trains are late he said, but television is on time. "It may be lousy, but it is on time."

Triple Crown AM Coin

General Cigar has picked up full sponsorship of CBS Radio's broadcasts of thoroughbred racing's "Triple Crown." Agency is Young & Rubicam.

Jack Drees, CBS Radio's weekend sports reporter, will call the races and Win Elliot, racing expert, will do the color. "Triple Crown" encompasses Kentucky Derby, May 2; The Preakness, May 16; and Belmont Stakes, June 6.

Marlo Lewis' TV Ski League Series

Add to tv's sports agenda the National Ski League, a 10-team circuit being formed with tv director Marlo Lewis as one of the league's directors and the man in charge of video plans for 13 hour shows based on the NSL.

League is being formed for the 1964-'65 season, with seven three-man teams of pros already committed, representing the slopes at Aspen, Colo.; Boyne Mountain, Mich.; Stratton Mountain, Vt.; Sugarbush, Vt.; Sun Valley, Idaho; Vail, Colo., and Windham, N. Y.

Weekly shows will pit team against team in a variety of events—slalom, obstacle course etc.—and the final show will be a World Series featuring the top teams. Slopes are being equipped with tv cameras and electronic scoring devices, with plans to vidtape each week's show two days in advance of air date.

League is looking for a network.

Pattern for Promos

Upcoming on-the-air network promotion for the new tv season probably will be one of the shortest in history.

What will telescope the time devoted to pitching the new season will be the Presidential conventions. Three networks—especially CBS-TV and NBC-TV—are riding hard on pre-convention political coverage. Good deal of on-the-air promos will be devoted to plugging the news operations of the respective three networks instead of the upcoming shows of the new season.

First convention gets underway on July 13, that being the Republican Party convention in San Francisco. The Democrats meet Aug. 24 in Atlantic City. Following the conventions, the three networks will go hot and heavy on promoting the new season, with a more concentrated on-the-air campaign for the new shows.

Emmy Nominations

The 1963-1964 season Emmy Award nominations were approved over the last weekend by the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences board of trustees with Program of the Year nominations going to NBC-TV's "American Revolution of '63"; CBS-TV's "Defenders" segment titled "Blacklist"; NBC-TV's "Kremlin"; ABC-TV's "The Making of a President"; and CBS-TV's "Town Meeting of the World" (the Telstar show of July 10, 1963).

ABC's No. 1 30-Market Status

Last week's 30-market Nielsen report (for the week ending April 19) was a throwback to the 1958-61 period when ABC-TV was leading the multi-city pack. The newest 30-market readings put ABC in No. 1 position with an 18.5 rating for all prime time commercial time periods (7:30 to 11 p.m.). No small factor was the Academy Awards, which ran second only to the CBS Lucy Special. Report also credits ABC with winning five out of the seven nights. CBS had a 17.7 average audience rating and NBC 15.6. Of the Top 20 shows, CBS had 10, ABC had eight and NBC two.

Here's the Top 20:

Lucy Special (CBS)	36.1
Academy Awards (ABC)	35.0
Bonanza (NBC)	31.7
Beverly Hillbillies (CBS)	30.5
*Dick Van Dyke (CBS)	29.5
Petticoat Junction (CBS)	27.7
Andy Griffith (CBS)	27.1
My Favorite Martian (CBS)	27.0
Fugitive (ABC)	26.4
McHale's Navy (ABC)	25.2
Patty Duke (ABC)	25.0
Jack Benny (CBS)	24.3
Hope Special (NBC)	23.9
Combat (ABC)	23.8
Farmer's Daughter (ABC)	23.8
Donna Reed (ABC)	23.7
Lassie (CBS)	22.5
Candid Camera (CBS)	22.4
Lucy (CBS)	22.4
Hollywood Palace (ABC)	22.3

'Sonny' Diskin's 'Way Back When' (CBS-TV Was a Groping W2XAB)

Marshal (Sonny) Diskin, notching his 25th anni in tv, and since 1947 a director at ABC, says his longrun with the medium has left his zest for it undimished.

He tunes in as often as then, says it gives the kids a savvy about the world that is unique to their generation, and further judges the electronic revolution as "one of the greatest things that's happened to the world."

He joined ABC in 1947 and the following year directed the Philadelphia conventions — Democrat, GOP and Henry Wallace' powwow of Progressives. He has directed every quadrennial parley since then for the net. This year, however, he's slated for specialization, handling Gen. Eisenhower's commentaries during the Republican meet. Additional political coverage assignments are forthcoming.

Although Diskin's career as a broadcast activist began in 1939, it actually traces back to '35 when he joined CBS as a page. Four years later he became part of a small manpower nucleus that set up tv shop for CBS at 15 Vanderbilt Ave., N.Y., as W2XAB. This was a "pilot" operation to "formulate what was going to be" when commercial operations were to commence two years hence.

At this early point, Adrian Murphy was v.p., Gilbert Seldes was g.m., and Worthington (Tony) Miner hooked on soon after as program director. Diskin recalls that early crew below the exec echelon as "the working stiffs who

NBC's $3,000,000 37-Day AM Take

NBC Radio reports $3,000,000 in new and renewed business for the 37-day period of March 9 to April 15; and also that the weekend "Monitor" had the highest second-quarter sales gross in its nine years on the air.

NBC Radio exec veepee Bill McDaniel says the web now has more than 40% of the three-network sponsored time, basing his report on INA-BAR Reports (which do not report Mutual). This represents a gain by the web in its leadership over CBS and ABC for this year over last.

Accounting for the $3,000,000 total biz are such sponsors as Rexall, Mars, Plymouth-Valiant, Oldsmobile, Lincoln-Mercury, Ford (quality car care), Mail Pouch Tobacco, Homelite Saws, Retail Clerks International, General Mills, Voice of Prophecy and Metropolitan Life.

Kind Word for Gabbers

Washington, April 28.

Leaders of the House of Representatives had some good words for broadcast reporters.

Kudoes came on the 25th anni of the establishment of the Congressional radio-tv reporters' galleries.

Praise for the broadcast reporters came from House Speaker John McCormack (D-Mass.), Majority Leader Carl Albert (D-Okla.), Minority Leader Charles Halleck (R-Ind.) and House Commerce Committee chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.)

Gallery superintendent Robert Menaugh and attendants Mike Michaelson and Max Barber were also congratulated for their service.

'Six for 1965-66' Glenn, Sinn Target

Norman Glenn, whose hep and shrewd involvement in the tv programming marts has won him high regard, has been promoted to the post of exec v.p. of programming for United Artists Television, the spot recently vacated by Dick Dorso.

Glenn had been v.p., programming, the past two years. Glenn, moving into the top programming spot at UA-TV, is beginning to realign UA-TV's programming plans with coproduction deals for the '65-'66 season already underway. Both Glenn and UA-TV prexy John Sinn are in active negotiations for six coproduction deals with producers, directors, writers and stars for the '65-'66 season.

In another move, Sinn has appointed Howard Gottfried administrative v.p., programming, with headquarters in Beverly Hills. Gottfried has spent this last year in the N.Y. office as v.p., production supervisor.

Dorso resigned from UA-TV to become a v.p. and partner in the Ashley - Steiner - Famous Artists agency.

Boucher's Kraft Pact

Hollywood, April 28.

Anthony Boucher, N.Y. Times mysterioso book reviewer, and suspense writer, has been signed by exec producer Frank P. Rosenberg as story consultant on next season's "Kraft Suspense Theater."

Hourlong series produced at Universal City studios is aired on NBC-TV. Boucher deal was set by Artists Agency Corp.

Hollywood, April 28.

Universal City's tv operation has cut the top for guestar talent on three of its vidpix series for next season, in line with a general vidfilmery sentiment against paying what execs consider too high prices to actors.

Universal City studios has lowered the tops of two series, Bob Hope-Chrysler anthology series and "Kraft Suspense Theater" from $10,000 to $7,500 for guests. In addition, it has pared the top for guests on its "Wagon Train" series from $10,000 to $5,000, as of now. Studio, incidentally, has already lined up Bobby Darin to guest in its initial "WT" segment for next season, rolling April 28.

A check of vidfilmeries around Hollywood revealed a tendency to keep star prices down, with tops ranging from $1,000 to $5,000 elsewhere.

At MGM-TV, policy is to keep the guestar top at $5,000 on all their series using guests. Desilu Studios this past season had a guestar top of $5,000 on its "The Greatest Show on Earth" series.

At Screen Gems, the only series utilizing guest stars on a regular basis was "Route 66," and there the guest price ranged from $3,500-$5,000, depending on the personality involved. Bing Crosby Productions adheres to a strict $5,000 top on its series, follows this figure on "Ben Casey," and will do the same for its new "Slattery's People" series debuting next season.

'Burke's Law's' 1G Top

Lowest guest figure in town for stars is "Burke's Law," at Four Star, which has a $1,000 top. However, in this instance stars work cameo bits, and usually their stint is confined to one day's work. However, since a number of stars guest in each seg, it runs the talent budget up, one company exec pointed out.

A number of execs contacted said they would not go above their top figure under any circumstances, pointing out if they paid more to one star, the news would get around quickly, and it would make their present policy meaningless. Some pacts have "favored nations" clauses whereby a talent is entitled to more coin, if the company subsequently pays another guest more than the top.

Some execs were outspoken on the subject of star salaries, saying when some telefilmeries paid as much as $15,000 for guest shots a few years ago, they did so in the belief this would lure into tv those few motion picture stars who have not yet guested in vidpix. "They found out it didn't work that way, that they were paying $15,000 for actors they could have gotten for $5,000. The few who haven't done tv won't begin because the top is $15,000 instead of $5,000," said one. He frankly said of his own company which had a $5,000 guestar top on a series: "We were stupid. We found that when we got to reruns, we couldn't afford high residuals the guest would to release them because of the receive."

A number of execs asserted that it is the quality of the script which is attractive to a guestar talent, not just the coin, that if a script is good enough the actor will take it for the going price.

Average guestar salary in Hollywood is about $5,000, according to Richard Wookey, head of casting for NBC-TV, and formerly in casting at Screen Gems, where he worked on "Route 66."

In The East—$1,500 Tops

Even so, this figure is not "equitable," Wookey asserted, explaining "there are just too many actors available. Three top N. Y. series, 'East Side, West Side,' 'The Defenders' and 'The Nurses,' all have guestar tops of $1,500, and they get the same people we do here."

Wookey ascribed what he terms too-high prices for guestar tal-

ARB Branches Out Into Radio Ratings; Initial 17,000 Sample

American Research Bureau, which heretofore has confined its rating efforts to television, plans to get into the radio rating business.

Move by ARB comes at a time when Nielsen drops its radio rating service this month.

ARB execs plan to meet this week or next with radio network officials to present ARB's national and local radio rating service. ARB's thrust in the directon of radio grew out of a $100,000 co-financed pilot project with RKO General.

The pilot rating project was performed in Detroit, where RKO General's CKLW functions in competition with other stations. The Detroit test was conducted for a two-week period in February, utilizing personal diaries, in which people would note their in-home and out-of-home radio listening, their tv viewing, and their newspaper and magazine reading habits. Basically, the test was described as a multi-media one, in which it was found that from 40% to 50% of radio listening was accounted for by out-of-home listening. The findings of the personal diaries were checked by telephone coincidentals. The overall correlation was described by ARB as "very encouraging."

Initial plan is to offer the radio networks a national sample of about 17,000 per report and to have from four to six reports yearly, depending on the needs of the networks. More sampling would be done to render local reports in the bigger markets.

Network support would be very meaningful in launching the service, according to an ARB spokesman. He saw the likelihood, though, that if the radio networks fail to subscribe, ARB, because of interest of key radio broadcasters, might go ahead with its radio rating service anyhow. ARB plans to make its Detroit study and the methodology it would use for its radio rating service available to National Assn. of Broadcasters rating council and other industry orgs.

Space TV Festival

Rome, April 28.

Space television already has its festival. The "Guglielmo Marconi Prize," this year in its sixth installment, will award a Gold Plaque to the emcees who handled speaker chores on the first Telstar I casts back in 1962.

Marconi prize will be held in Grosseto, on the Italian Riviera, from Oct. 3-7, and will also feature the usual yearly events and awards. These include the top awards for achievement in Italian television, and will spotlight tv originals as well as the importance of video in relations between peoples of the world.

An international jury is being designated to handle international judging aspects of prize.

ABC's Retreat On TV Tint Front

After a season, as promised, of some tinting up, ABC-TV has quietly reversed field on the 1964-65 season, with the result that it will be doing substantially less color next semester.

The web's current sked boasts three hours of primetime color-casting a week via "Wagon Train," "Greatest Show on Earth" and "Flintstones." In addition, it's now-concluded 13-weekend series of "Challenge Golf" had also been tint. By comparison, '64-'65 will find only two half-hours in color —"Flintstones" Thursday at 7:30 p.m., and the new "Johnny Quest" cartooner Fridays at 7:30. (Plus some of the Fox and UA Sunday night feature pix.)

At least a couple of the new shows from the 20th-Fox mill—"Peyton Place" and "Voyage to Bottom of the Sea"—were originally conceived as tint entries, but both will open up in September in b&w. The retreat from color is a case of budgetary caution, particularly at a time when the net is splurging on its news department as never before. Somewhere along the line there has to be some belt-tightening, it's felt.

As for the two cartoons going in color against the retrenchment trend, that's one way to distinguish them from the daytime kidstrip animation.

Aussie Govt. Chief Calls TV Top Industry With Value of $600-Mil

Sydney, April 28.

Postmaster - general Arthur Hulme, in charge of all tv and radio operations within the Aussie territory for the Sir Robert Menzies' Liberal Party government, said when opening a new country station that the Aussie tv setup was now a $600,000,000 industry and was still advancing month by month.

Commercial station operators here report biz as extremely buoyant on sponsorship intake with mainly American product and upbeating at a fast tempo. Figuring here is that the commercial operators will request Hulme to okay additional stations in the near future to pace with the biz available coast-to-coast.

TAP LAIRD FOR KRAFT

Hollywood, April 28.

Jack Laird has been named one of the producers of "Kraft Suspense Theatre" series at Universal City studios. Laird this past season took over as producer of the same studio's "Channing," after about 10 segs had been filmed.

Laird will also write several originals for the hourlong series.

24 Nations Repped At Cannes TV Fest

Rome, April 28.

Italy is being repped at the current Cannes Television Festival by "Mastro Don Gesualdo," serialized drama directed by Giacomo Vaccari, with E. M. Salerno and by "Fantascienza di Ieri" (Science Fiction-Yesterday).

All told, 24 nations are entered, and according to reports, 85 entries have already been trimmed down to a more workable total.

Jury consists of Rene Clair, Gadton Bonheur, and Pierre Bost—all motion picture people; two reps of the International Council for TV and Cinema (Ted Cott of the U.S., Hungry's M. Szinetar) and four delegates of the European Broadcasting Union: Austria's Leopold Hainish, Spain's Adolfo Marsillach, Britain's Milton Shulman and Norway's Rigmor Rodin.

No Italians are repped, and local observers are wondering why.

'GRINDL' REPRIEVE; GETS SUMMER RIDE

"Grindl," the NBC-TV Sunday comedy series that makes way for Bill Dana next year, will get a summer rerun reprieve of about 12 weeks. This is after sponsor Procter & Gamble agency Leo Burnett had fiddled around with a number of ideas for summer run that didn't come off.

Agency had wanted to use the gambit of a string of pilots that never made the networks, a plan that had been used in summers past with little success. Apparently sponsor P&G had a couple show projects on the shelf that it wanted to get at least the one exposure. Network nixed the plan, however.

Metromedia's 2-Day D.C. Bash As WTTG-TV Preems Posh Studios

Washington, April 28.

Amidst social and political hoopla, Metromedia's WTTG-TV today (28) dedicated its ultra-modern $2,500,000 studio.

With festivities and big names to match the occasion Metromedia Board Chairman John Kluge, Metropolitan Television prez Bennet Korn and WTTG manager Lawrence Fraiburg hosted the two-day bash, one of the biggest industry folk have seen here.

Part of the political draw pointed up Metromedia's coast-to-coast operations. Standing by for the videotape "ribbon cutting" ceremonies were Senators Jacob Javits (R-N. Y.) and Thomas Kuchel (R-Calif.), Los Angeles Mayor Samuel Yorty and chairman of the District of Columbia Commissioners Walter Torbriner.

Emceeing the ceremony were Kluge and pubaffairs veep Mark Evans.

Also present were FCC Chairman E. William Henry, NAB prez LeRoy Collins, House Commerce Committee chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.) and U. S. Information Agency film chief George Stevens Jr.

Nearly 200 luncheon guests watched the ceremonies inside on closed-circuit tv.

The luncheon marked the second of three social gatherings keynoting the station opener. Activities were kicked off Monday evening with a cocktail party for 600.

Next Monday, Metromedia execs, station managers and news directors will join their local Congressmen at a studio reception. About 100 members of Congress are expected to attend the "getting to know you" session.

Once inside, the hundreds of guests at the various functions really caught an eyeful from the posh interior design of Robert Neipold, to the modern art to the heady array of the latest in telectronic equipment.

A side feature for the tours of Washington's most extensively automated station was a chance for guests to see themselves on tv. The tour groups led by Mark Evans were filmed on videotape at the beginning of their tour and saw themselves on tv during a later part of the swing.

The automated system is keyed to "Visual 600" the Visual Electronics Corp. complex operating on IBM punch cards. Aimed at eliminating human switching er-

ITC's 600G Net; Gross Up 30%

Independent Television Corp. reported net profits after taxes will come to $600,000 for the fiscal year ending April 30, 1964.

ITC prexy and board chairman Mike Nidorff said that gross sales for the current fiscal year will be up 30% over 1963. Nidorf stressed that this is the fourth consecutive year in which ITC showed profits.

ITC, a wholly owned subsid of Associated Television of England, has earned a net profit of $2,600,000 over the four-year period, according to Nidorf. Commenting on the current fiscal year, Nidorf said that both the domestic and international divisions contributed to the increased earnings, with domestic sales almost double that of '62-'63 and international sales showing a 14% decrease over last year's record high.

Product for the new fiscal year will include "Man of the World," first-run, one-hour adventure series starring Craig Stevens; and the off-network "Espionage," produced by Herb Brodkin.

There also is the kiddie half-hour color series, "Mr. Piper," and the science-fictioner half-hour "Stingray," also in color.

Three other major projects include a second series of Jo Stafford one-hour musical specials; second year's production of "The Saint," starring Roger Moore; and another adventure series, as yet untitled, starring Patrick McGoohan. Also a series of specials built around world-famous circuses and a new half-hour sports series, "Champions in Action."

WFIL Technicians Strike

Philadelphia, April 28.

Technicians and cameramen employed by the WFIL radio and tv stations went on strike early Saturday (25) but both outlets of the Triangle chain continued their broadcasting schedules over the weekend.

The strikers include 50 members of Local 804, International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes, whose extended contract with WFIL expired at 2.30 a.m., Saturday.

The local's membership rejected a management offer a half-hour after the contract expiration and set up picket lines outside the stations' new headquarters at City Line and Monument Aves. an hour later.

A spokesman for the Triangle stations said other employes came to work despite the picket line.

NBC Films Sees Hot '64; 1st Qtr. Biz $1,500,000

NBC Films has had a big first quarter of '64 in syndication, and Bill Breen, division's veepee, figures the good sales record is the result of good product. And, he also figures that the sound first quarter signals a good year.

Reports are that NBC Films grossed around $1,500,000 for the fourth quarter of the current year against $900,000 for the first quarter of 1963. Last year, the company salesmen took to the road with "Astro Boy," "Continental Classroom" and the off-web "Laramie" as new product to offer. This year, following the annual sales meet in Miami, they hit the road with "Car 54, Where Are You," "The Richard Boone Show," "Science in Action" and "The Lawless Years."

Besides the increase in packages this year as a boost to early sales, Breen calls last year probably the worst in syndication history from the seller's standpoint. There was so much product dumped (the packages from Desilu, Warners, Four Star etc.) that sales were tough for all. But with much of the available off-web series now out of the way, and the tightened network schedules (ABC's returns to stations at 10:30 a couple of nights a week), he sees an improved picture There's the fact also that the big increase over the last year in residual payments will keep a lot of the marginal off-web dogs out of the running, because of the slight chance they will return their investment.

The high residuals, however, he feels make for an actually improved situation. The price is up, but so is the quality of product being peddled. As for originating syndication packages, it can still be done, he says, but on a very modest budget. NBC and Japanese interests were able to make a go of "Astro Boy," for example, by splitting the production tab and creating it for both oriental and occidental viewing.

STATIONS ON TARGET WITH 'RIFLEMAN'

Four Star Distribution, which sold its off-web "Rifleman" series on a two-run basis, says it's getting requests from stations to release the package for additional runs.

Sold in more than 100 markets for a reported gross of $2,500,000, "Rifleman" was initially played in syndication beginning in September of 1963, with 60% of the stations stripping the 168 stanzas. Since the package at two runs can be played out in 67 weeks when stripped, stations have been asking for third and fourth runs.

Problem arises with big residual payments that will come if show goes into the extra runs, so FSD is hoping to whip up enough customers for the repeats to make the extra runs feasible.

WPIX Summer Grid

Figuring pro football fans are already restless for the fall action, WPIX-TV has slated a summer series of recaps on the National Football League's schedule of last fall and winter.

Local indie this week began a 14-week series of NFL recaps Saturday nights from 10:30 to 11:30 p.m. Package is distributed by Tel Ra Productions with former Philadelphia Eagles star Tom Brookshire calling the rerun action. Schedule runs through Aug. 1.

March Blows In Yoder & Lemon's WNBQ Chi Payoff

Chicago, April 28.

The "judgment book"—otherwise known as the March ARB, and one of the year's key surveys in this market because it's the index for so many of the fall spot buys— has smiled on WNBQ. Not only has the NBC anchor regained clear title to second place here (after running a tie for the position with WGN-TV last month) but, almost more importantly, it has finally caught stride with WBBM-TV's front-running 10 p.m. newscast with a five-day average of 26 vs. the CBS station's 27.

To catch WBBM-TV's news has been the prime objective of v.p. Lloyd Yoder and his station manager Bob Lemon for five years, ever since they came in to take over the WNBQ reins. Back in those days (citing the March ARB, 1958) WBBM-TV's post-network news was the market's highest-rated local program, averaging 35 against WNBQ's runner-up 12. The gap grew even greater in December of that year when the CBS station scored a 40 against WNBQ's 8, and that's when Yoder and Lemon began to tool up for the chase.

They've had several things in their favor in their inchmeal progress: (1) the emergence of Huntley & Brinkley as the hot news duo, reflecting some of the network's news leadership on the local station itself; (2) WBBM-TV's expansion of its 10 p.m. news this year to 30 minutes, which has resulted (possibly only temporarily) in some loss of audience to the compact quarter hour package still offered by WNBQ; and (3) the continuing popularity of Johnny Carson's "Tonight" show immediately following the WNBQ newscast and doubtlessly adding to its audience. However, it must be noted that WNBQ's lead-ins for the 10 o'clock news, with the exception of Jack Paar on Friday nights, are all second- and third-placers in the ARB report.

While acknowledging these benefits, Yoder and Lemon still attach most of the credit for WNBQ's news gains to Frank Jordan, the former NBC News director here (and now head of an election coverage unit for the network), who rebuilt the lagging news staff and

So. Car. Senate Says It's Okay for Kid To Watch TV Bubble-Baths

Columbia, S.C., April 28.

It's all right for children to watch bubble-bath commercials on television, the S.C. Senate decided, but sex-loaded books and magazines should be banned.

By a vote of 31-2, the Senate passed an anti-obscenity bill to reinforce one already on the state law books. But the measure is doomed because the House will not have to consider it before adjournment.

The bubble-bath ban was proposed in one of a number of amendments turned down by the Senate, but it stimulated a lot of debate.

"Where can I see that on television?" asked Sen. Rembert C. Dennis of Berkeley.

"I saw one Monday night, and it wasn't too bad, either," said Sen. Henry B. Richardson of Sumter.

"How about banning fan dancers?" suggested Sen. John D. Long of Union.

But Sen. John C. West of Kershaw had the last word. "What about increasing penalties if the bubble pops" he asked.

FCC Still at Sixes and Sevens On TV Station Application Forms

Washington, April 28.

FCC refused to commit itself to a specific reporting form for television stations deciding instead to mix a batch of proposals and toss them out for discussion.

Advancing stealthily after floating its first trial balloon on application forms last winter, the Commission said it is still weighing the counter-proposals offered by an industry-government-bar committee. The group was formed after industry objections to the first proposals.

Commission indicated its inclination to go along with the committee's suggestion for two reporting forms—one for renewal applications and another for handling the rest.

On the crucial issue of how detailed a report on community needs and desires an applicant must submit, the Commission revealed a stance of flexibility bordering on indecision.

For the upcoming May 18 oral arguments on the application forms, FCC said it would offer both the long detailed community reporting form it first suggested and the much shorter form proposed by the committee.

Commission averred it still was not sold on the shorter version.

Particularly troublesome is the question of tying in a report of community wishes with a projection of future programming. Commission wants the predictions but the Committee does not. FCC said it recognized the inconsistencies in putting the two concepts in one bundle and reserved the right to "rectify" them when appropriate.

Dropped from the package was the original suggestion for annual filing of programming and community policies.

Nevertheless, FCC still asked for comments on the possibility of requesting some sort of statement from stations on their annual programming.

Dissenting from the compromise moves was Commissioner Robert Bartley. He said the Commission should have information on what stations are doing in their areas and furthermore these statements should also be posted for public consumption in the communities.

Deadline for requesting time at the oral argument is May 1.

Goustin as OF Exec

Former eastern manager of Ziv tv programs Albert Goustin has been named general sales manager of Official Films.

Goustin's initial task at Official will be launching the company's new syndicated show for October release, "Survival," following "Biography" and last year's "Battle Line" as an OF original entry for the local markets. Besides Ziv, Goustin has been with Paramount as director of sales for tv productions and United Artists Television as general manager for the special plans division.

NAB's 'Let's Get Moving' on FCC Rules for CATV

Washington, April 28.

NAB again prodded FCC to hurry up and write rules regulating community antenna television systems.

NAB called for rules barring CATV from duplicating local station programming but averred even this was not enough to lift the "serious threat" recent CATV developments have imposed on broadcasters.

NAB's comments filed by General Counsel Douglas Anello demanded a wide sweeping legislative look-see at the whole CATV imbroglio.

From the inquiry and public statements FCC could determine what legislative proposals are needed to implement a national telecommunications policy.

In the interim, Commission should devise a policy requiring microwave applicants, who want to serve CATV systems, to show how extension of the signal would serve the public interest.

NAB lashed out at CATV systems "leap frogging" from one metropolis to another skipping over numerous smaller local stations along the way.

Non-duplication bars would not alleviate the danger that advertisers would only buy time on a few big city stations and let CATV systems carry their message to the hamlets.

NAB warned that a "proliferation" of big city station signals will result in a cutback of time buying in smaller local markets. Eventually this would depress local programming, NAB said.

O'SEAS DEALS ON NEW 20TH SKEINS

20th-Fox tv has set its first overseas deal for the four new skeins it will have bowing on Yank networks next season.

"12 O'Clock High," "Voyage to Bottom of the Sea" and "Peyton Place" were sold in Australia to Television Corp. Ltd., and "Daniel Boone" was dealt in the same market to Austrama Television. All except "Boone" were also sold for Japan via Nippon Educational Television.

First three shows are locked in at ABC-TV and "Boone" is in the NBC-TV lineup for next fall.

Television Corp. also bought a trio of syndication offerings—"Crusade in Europe," "Anatomy of a Crime" and "War to End All Wars." The Japanese educational net additionally took the off-network (in the U.S.) "Adventure in Paradise" series.

'Best of Charlie Chan' As 20th Syndie Entry

"Best of Charlie Chan," package of 21 features, has been placed on the market by 20th-Fox tv, which move follows several pre-release deals in key markets.

The ace Oriental sleuth is variously portrayed by Warner Oland and Sidney Toler.

Tap Jensen For Doug Edwards Slot

Jim Jensen, news correspondent for N.Y.'s WCBS-TV, has been selected to succeed Douglas Edwards on the Monday through Friday WCBS-TV "Late News" at 11 p.m.

Edwards, who said he resigned at his own request, continues under contract with CBS News, for which he does an afternoon tv news show and four CBS Radio weekday newscasts. Edwards said his contract with CBS News runs for another two years. His contract with the station ends Aug. 7.

Jensen, who takes over June 8 on the major N.Y. news showcase, has been with WCBS-TV since January, '64. He has appeared on the various news shows of the station as a reporter-correspondent, both in and out of station studios.

Jensen came to WCBS-TV after three years with WBZ, Boston, where he was a reporter and a newscaster. Prior to that he had spent 10 years as a broadcast newsman in the midwest.

Starting Saturday (2), Jensen also will do the 6:30 to 7 p.m. local news for an interim period. The Saturday evening news show had been done by Mike Wallace. Wallace, who does the station's late evening Saturday news and CBS-TV's daily morning news, pubaffairs show, wanted relief from the early evening Saturday assignment. A permanent newscaster for the early evening Saturday news show has yet to be selected.

WGN Barn Dance 40th Anni Whoopup

Chicago, April 28.

There was a point in 1959 when it looked as though the Barn Dance's 35th year on the air might be its last. That was the year that WLS changed hands, decided to change its image and gave the veteran country & western show the boot.

Just in the nick of time WGN radio and tv picked up the show, and it is still going strong as it celebrates its 40th year on Saturday (2). It was the first c&w show to make a sizable dent in the airlanes, and preceded such shows as "Grand Ole Opry," "Louisiana Hayride," "New Dominion Barn Dance," "Big D Jamboree" and "Ozark Jubilee."

For the anni celebration, the Barn Dance is bringing back such early luminaries as Lulu Belle & Scotty ("Does The Spearmint Lose Its Flavor On The Bed Post Overnight?") and "world's champion yodeler" Colleen Wilson.

Some of the former Barn Dance regulars who will not be back for the festivities are George Gobel (then a c&w guitarist-singer), Gene Autry, Homer & Jethro, Rex Allen, Pat Buttram and Fibber McGee & Molly.

The program began in 1924 in Chicago under the title of "The Old Time Fiddlers," changed its name two years later, and a year after that began broadcasting remote from the 8th St. Theatre. In the next 30 years, more than 3,000,000 people paid to watch the Saturday night broadcast. The present WGN shows are free and usually SRO.

The current resident cast of the show consists of Arkie The Arkansas Woodchopper, Bob Atcher, the Johnson Sisters, Bob & Bobbie Thomas, Cousin Tilford, Orion Samuelson, the Sage Riders, Tiny Murphy, Toby Nix, Lino Frigo, Jimmy Hutchinson, Johnny Frigo (a fiddler who also leads the alternate night house trio at Mister Kelly's) and Dolph Hewitt, who is also packager of the show.

Hewitt has been guiding the Barn Dance since it moved over to WGN and he has greatly expanded its activities in the personal appearance field.

FCC Orders McLendon to Give Yarborough 18 Hrs. of Free Time

Washington, April 28.

In an "equal time" case generating lots of political heat, FCC ordered broadcaster Gordon McLendon to give 18 hours and 36 minutes of free time to Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.).

They are candidates against one another in the May 2 Texas Democratic primary for the U.S. Senate.

McLendon, with broadcasting interests in several states, owns KLIF-AM-FM, Dallas; KILT-AM and KOST-FM, Houston; and KTSA-AM, San Antonio.

He has been advancing his own candidacy on the Texas stations, while sending texts of what he broadcast plus offers of equal time to Yarborough every step of the way in registered letters.

Yarborough hardly ever replied, except with a last-minute "equal time" demand to FCC which would permit him, if his lungs held out, to saturate McLendon's stations from now until voting time.

Yarborough speaks FCC's language with a powerful political accent. He is both a member of the Senate Commerce Committee and its Communications Subcommittee, each of which has jurisdiction over all FCC bills, not to mention the first say in confirmation of FCC Commissioners.

Further, the ubiquitious Yar-

TV 'Romper Room' Big Europe Click

London, April 28.

The international success of Fremantle's "Romper Room" series is spreading through Europe. Last year it got its first British booking with Grampian TV, starting off on a four-days-a-week basis, and will be going to five days a week at the end of its first year. On June 29 it is scheduled to open on Anglia TV, running every weekday for 30 minutes. Other U.K. dates are expected before the end of the year.

In the meantime, new commitments have been made in Scandinavia. It is set to open on the Norwegian network in the first week of September, and initially will run twice weekly on a 30-minutes basis, but it is planned to extend the booking to five days a week, with hourly shows. At about the same time the kidvid series is due to open in Finland, also starting off with two half-hour shows a week.

SCHAFITZ ORDERED TO SCRAM JUNE 1

Washington, April 28.

FCC ordered the Ohio UHF and AM stations of Sanford Schafitz off the air by June 1.

Action follows up earlier Commission move denying renewal for WWIZ-AM, Lorain, and refusing a construction permit for WXTV-TV, Youngstown.

At the time FCC said Schafitz transferred control of WWIZ to the Lorain Journal sans official okay. He was charged with skimping on information to FCC on the WXTV application.

Commissioners Rosel Hyde and Kenneth Cox did not participate in the decision.

Quinlan Carries A Pay-TV Torch, 4th Web Gleam

Chicago, April 28.

Insisting that he was speaking for himself and not necessarily for his new company which is broadcasting bound, Sterling (Red) Quinlan got into the pay-tv pulpit.

In his first public address since joining the newspaper-encyclopedia publishing firm, Field Enterprises Inc., the former ABC-TV viceprez welcomed the approach of the pay-see medium and saw in it the promise of a fourth network "emerging in a shape totally unlike networks as we know them today." Any fourth network, Quinlan told regional members of the journalism fraternity Sigma Delta Chi, would be impossible unless it has pay-tv as its base, even if only a "hodge-podge of pay-tv systems, CATV's and UHF stations."

While not disparaging free tv and the present three network system, except to note that they are inextricably locked into the numbers game and can't afford to chance originality or innovation, Quinlan spoke of a new hope for creativity in a boxoffice electronics medium. "I am for all developments that will unleash new and stronger creative forces in this country," Quinlan said. "And if the American public has to pay in cash and the profits go to artists, writers, actors, directors and pro-

STATIONS RIDE SPOT BIZ CREST

By BILL GREELEY

About the last thing a syndicator ever expected to hear from his station customers was a plaintive, "Please, don't bring me any sponsors."

But that incredible switch is being echoed across the country in the "tight" markets where the tremendous increase over the last several months in spot business has the local programmers passing up the fast buck of the syndicated show with a built-in bankroll for the national blurb campaigns being placed by the gross by national advertisers. Overkill? It's the age of overblurb.

This good green spot buck actually has stations eschewing the prestige sponsors—the banks, the utilities etc.—of local and regional origin, ordinarilly, who are looking for "image" projection, and who will settle for the three soft blurbs and syndicated shows of a certain quality that go easy on viewers and reflect equally well on a station's own fix in the audience mind.

Example: a New York station turned down a bank sponsor—52-week pact—on a syndicated show to fill the breaks with the girdles, cigs, deoderants, pills, pops et. al. that then clutter the slate further with piggybacks that have been seen lately to carry as many as three products in a minute.

Why? The buck. Instead of the three or four relatively soft, consistent — sometimes institutional — blurbs of the single bankroller, the station proceeds to upcut the filmed syndication show (sometimes removing whole scenes) and slap in two and a half minutes extra of commercial. The many spots bring in more dollars per se. They also allow for the unloading of the run-of-station spot buys that break down to given number of blurbs in various time classifications—A, B, C etc.

The New York station is one example of many in the big and tight tv markets that practice the blurb-jamming in local times, and carry it over, in many cases, into the network feeds, upcutting web promos and program intros and closings. A station in Los Angeles, for example, will take a 26-1/2-minute film program and slice it back to 22 minutes, shoving as many as eight blurbs into a half-hour.

Another effect of the great swell in spot billings has been for the shlock local station operator to forego fresh programming while riding with the third and fourth run of a property already bought by the station. It little matters when the show, no matter what it is, will be clogged with the small-ticket hucksters who are currently grabbing any and all availabilities in the many sellers markets around the country.

These abuses are not industry-wide. But they are not, by any stretch of the NAB's imagination, confined to a buck-happy fringe of operators, either (the usual dodge in such matters). The threat of Federal regulation of commercial time seems remote at this time, since Congress just recently slapped down—by a big margin—FCC's recent proposals for same. And there are the chronic rumbles from the Madison Ave. factotums, who want to knock off everybody's piggybacks but their own. And industry self-regulation is a lip-service joke.

Thus the boys with the license to steal seem to be safe for the time, but most observers who get out around the country have strong convictions that the ultimate result of the age of overblurb can only hurt tv as a whole and the stations involved individually.

'Boating Tips' to Aussie

Syndicated "Boating Tips," one-minute radio series from Alan Sands Productions, has been sold in Australia and New Zealand.

Quickie format features William McKeown, ex-Popular Boating editor, who also writes the strip.

NAB as Frosting on TFE Cake Strengthens Syndicators' Role

On the basis of preliminary talks, it looks good that syndicators for the first time in years will rejoin the National Assn. of Broadcasters in numbers. When the NAB meets in Washington next year, film syndicators most likely will join the annual convention under the NAB umbrella.

Many film syndicators, though, will retain their identity with Television Film Exhibit, the loosely constructed organization, formed for the sole purpose of exhibiting at the NAB, but now developing into a loosely-knit association, the closest thing ever to a trade organization of syndicators.

Indicative of the more permanent, year-round developing characteristic of TFE is the upcoming N.Y. meet of tv station program directors. When Dick Carlton, TFE co-chairman heard of the May event, he quickly polled other TFE members via phone, and it was decided that TFE should sponsor a cocktail party for the visiting station program directors, key men doing business with syndicators. Calton, for one, forsees a fruitful association with the NAB, a liaison which over a long period of time might involve syndicators in such exclusively NAB areas of the television code and rating guidelines.

In June, when NAB execs gather to blueprint plans for the '65 Washington annual conclave, TFE execs are due to confer with NAB officials. On the basis of preliminary conversations with NAB execs, film syndicators of TFE are confident that they can work out their problems amicably.

TFE, which had 16 member companies at the Chicago NAB meet, for the '65 conclave wants to have its members located on the same hotel floor. If that is secured—and the probabilities look good at this point—the film syndicators would rejoin NAB as associate members, retain their TFE identity, and hold the now familiar Television Film Exhibit and cocktail party under the auspices of NAB.

It's recognized for one reason or another some film syndicators won't join TFE, under any circumstance. Three syndie subsids of the networks, for example, traditionally stay out of any organization such as TFE because of network policy. MCA TV, a key syndicator, follows a conservative policy and has kept apart from TFE. Metro TV at the most recent TFE Chicago meet decided against joining "the marketplace for tv film wares," held independent of the NAB. Metro TV, though, may reexamine its policy and join the 16 syndicators of TFE which includes firms ranging in size from Screen Gems to American International.

The reexamination by Metro and

Progress Report On 'Revival of A Corpse' at WNBC

New York's radio pros, a nervous bunch in the ordinary run of competition, are anxiously watching the revival of a corpse as NBC flagship WNBC swings into its new talk format.

WNBC's new general manager George Skinner, who took over the gargantuan job of pulling the property out of the rating and revenue reds, is so far enjoying the battle. So far it appears he has more going for him than Casey Stengel with the N.Y. Mets. The more-going is Brad Crandall, who is on the phone with listeners every night from 7:45 to midnight and who is proving a long-hitter of the listener curves who can likewise field anything that comes along.

Crandall is that good that Skinner now plans to put Long John Nebel on the black horn with listeners every afternoon when Nebel moves over to the station from his longtime allnight strip on WOR. Nebel will move his midnight-to-dawn strip to WNBC, but has also agreed to try a daytime phone turn, which for him must come under the title of sunlighting.

Also going well so far in the new slate are Bill Mazer with a phone bit on sports from 4:30 to 6 p.m. and singer Mimi Benzell in the roll of interviewer from noon to 2 p.m. The station's leftover talents (pre-Skinner) will be relieved of their duties as new talent is lined up for the remaining morning and afternoon spots.

Skinner reportedly is looking for a husband-wife team for the morning, with no advance word on who the couple will be.

At the outset of the WNBC revamp, the competition was hopefully predicting interference from the NBC powers, but Skinner vows that he has had nothing but a free hand so far. With Crandall clearly showing himself to be somewhere to the left of the Birch Society, and Miss Benzell discussing such intimate subjects as the pros and cons of birth control, a lot of the moldy NBC Standards and Practices rules have been busted with no squawks yet. Miss Benzell and guests, for example, can use the word "contraceptive" without any upstairs hysteria. Todate the only squawks have been from the telephone company, says Skinner. They were around to complain that the Crandall show was tying up the Plaza 7 exchange every night.

Marks' Sales Slot

E. Bradley Marks has been promoted to the post of sales manager for Walter Reade-Sterling.

Marks, who will concentrate a good deal of his activities on the company's feature film package, had been eastern sales manager. Before joining Walter Reade-Sterling, he was national tv sales manager for Buena Vista, the distributing company for Walt Disney's "Mickey Mouse Club."

Rust Craft Nod To Fred Weber

Steubenville, April 28.

Jack N. Berkman, president of Rust Craft Broadcasting Co., announces the appointment of Fred Weber as executive V.P. of television and radio operations.

Rust Craft Broadcasting is a part of Rust Craft Greeting Cards, Inc. The Rust Craft Stations are: WSTV-TV, AM, FM-Steubenville; WRCB-TV, Chattanooga; WRDW-TV, Augusta; WBOY-TV, AM-Clarksburg, W. Va.; WPIT, AM-FM, Pittsburgh; WSOL, Tampa; and WWOL-AM, FM, Buffalo.

Mr. Weber had been associated with Rust Craft Broadcasting, formerly the Friendly Group, for 15 years, ever since the termination of his association with WDSU, New Orleans, where he helped to construct WDSU-TV in 1948. Previously, he was general manager, V.P. of Mutual Broadcasting System; and a manager of station relations for NBC.

'Gunsmoke,' in 10th Year, Study In Frustration For Freelancers

Hollywood, April 28.

CBS-TV's easygoing "adult" oater "Gunsmoke" has underplayed itself into its 10th season with episode now filming, the 342d seg (233 half hours, 108 hours) lensed since John Meston's radio creation became visual. Producer Norman Macdonnell sees the coming year as strictly "business as usual" with no new innovations plotted for either skein or approach to same. And therein lies a tale of frustration for the Hollywood freelance community.

Series, acknowledges Macdonnell, is something of a "closed shop," especially for writers. He notes that of all scripts penned for the series since the beginning only about 30 have been by freelance scribes. Regulars who have written bulk of shows in the past will continue doing so this year. Meston will do 10, Katherine Hite 10, Les Crutchfield eight and John Dunkle three or four.

"Outside" writers usually insist on approaching the show's characters from a stereotype standpoint, says Macdonnell, with Matt Dillon (Jim Arness) penned as "The Hero," and Doc (Milburn Stone) written as "The Kindly Old Doctor," etc. Actually character shadings are much more subtle, insists the producer.

Directors will be similarly "family," with Harry Harris back for 15 and bulk of balance to split between regular meggers Ted Post and Andrew MacLaglin who has record 93 "Gunsmoke" credits and will do as many this season as his sked will allow (he directs Jimmy Stewart in "Fields of Honor" at Universal). English director Philip Leacock will probably come abroad for a few, adds Macdonnell with "one or two" new men trying their hand at a few others.

New directors also often find it difficult getting into the "swing" of show, according to skein regular Amanda Blake. The difficulty of which she speaks according to Macdonnell, is in coping with actors who quite naturally know the characters they portray much better than any new director could hope to, and dealing with the seeming casualness to which the "Gunsmoke" vets appear to be approaching their roles. Says producer, "Jim (Arness) does upset and drive some directors crazy" adding however, that he, like other cast members, are complete pros when time comes for cameras to turn with result that no hour-length "Gunsmoke" has ever gone over its alloted six-day schedule.

"You appreciate this show after having been on some other tension-filled program," says Maclaglin noting on the set that they had lensed "seven pages and its not even lunch yet."

Freelance work for thesps of less than guest-star status is also scarcer than what is offered by similar shows, because of use of "regulars" in such minor stet roles as bartenders, hotel operators, etc. Glenn Strange appears behind Longbranch saloon bar, Jim Nusse

ABC's $1,000,000 Boost in AM Biz

The second quarter, with a couple of selling months still to go, seems a cinch to be the best in ABC Radio history. Billings have already matched the record fourth period last year, according to Ted Douglas Jr., sales veep at the net.

Exec also says that gross billings for the first sixmonth should be more than than $1,000,000 over the same period last year. The cheer in large part is due to the alignment of advertisers new to the web.

Among them since first of the year are American Express, Emery Industries, Grove Labs, H. J. Heinz, Mail Pouch Tobacco, Morton House Kitchens, National Car Rental, Ovaltine, Realemon, Merle Norman Cosmetics, Real-Kill Products, Switzerland Cheese, and the Wyler Co.

So far this year, biggest gain in the ABC Radio sked has been registered by "Breakfast Club," with billings reportedly up 49%.

ABC O&O POWWOW FOR AD-PUB CHIEFS

Ad-pub directors of the five ABC-TV o&os have been summoned to New York for a May 4-6 powwow spotlighting plans for the new season. Confab will be guided by Sy Cowles, ad-pub chieftain for the o&o division, with network brass joining some of the sessions.

Coming in from their outposts are Richard Hughes, WXYZ-TV, Detroit; Tony Bachman, WBKB, Chicago; George Rodman, KGO-TV, San Francisco; and Jack Brembeck, KABC-TV, Los Angeles. Also attending, natch, will be Leo Collins of WABC-TV, N.Y., and Gerald Flesher, sales promo manager for the web's spot sales setup.

Newhouse Gets 100% of KTVI; Pays $7,500,000

Washington, April 28.

Publisher S. I. Newhouse has bought 74% of KTVI-TV, Channel 2, St. Louis, for about $7,500,000. Newhouse and his family previously owned the other 26% of the ABC affiliate.

Sale was confirmed by Monroe Oppenheimer, D.C. attorney for Signal Hill Telecasting Corp., the selling company. FCC's approval will be petitioned for "within a few days," Oppenheimer said.

Montreux Fest Award To CBS Gleason Show

"Jackie Gleason Show" won a Bronze Rose at the recently concluded Montreux (Switzerland) International Television Festival, a competition keyed to light entertainment entries from all over the world.

The Gleason outing entered by CBS Films was the one in which Gleason, testing a watch, goes through a brick wall, telecast on CBS-TV Nov. 9. This was the third time, CBS Films had a winning entry at Montreux, the others being "Julie and Carol at Carnegie Hall," which won the first prize Golden Rose in '63; and a Judy Garland special which won honorable mention in '62.

Knopf's SG Pilot

Hollywood, April 28.

Series project which is a modern adventure drama, has no title at present. Knopf was formerly under contract with Four Star as a writer-creator, and is prexy of the tv-radio branch of Writers Guild of America West. His signing is in line with SG coast chief Jackie Cooper's move to bring new talent into the SG roster.

Binyon's Daystar Slot

Hollywood, April 28.

Claude Binyon Jr. has been appointed supervising production manager at Daystar Productions, and will supervise all firm's projects, including its "The Outer Limits" series on ABC-TV.

Former DAILY VARIETY staffer prior to joining Daystar last fall, Binyon was with Warner Bros. as a tv director.

Rep. Rogers Tells Station Reps Why He's on Their Side

Rep. Walter E. Rogers, chairman of the House Sub-Committee for Communications and Power, declared yesterday (28) at the annual awards luncheon of the Station Representatives Assn. in New York that FCC's attempt (unsuccessful) to regulate the frequency of broadcast commercials was aimed at invading the constitutional rights of the legislative branch of government.

"It was my position at that time and it is presently my position that this was an attempt by a department to invade the constitutional prerogative of the legislative branch of government; a well meaning attempt, no doubt, but nevertheless an attempt," said Rogers.

Comparing the FCC move with the Marbury vs. Madison decision (in which John Marshall in 1803 grabbed the power that the Supreme Court still maintains to veto an act of Congress), Rogers said that FCC's abandonment of the procedure does not settle the question, because every member of the Commission, with one exception, testified before his committee that they believed FCC should have the power to regulate commercials.

Said Rogers, "Should we take the reverse position (that FCC should have such powers,) we would be inviting further encroachment generally and specifically."

At the luncheon the annual SRA timebuyer awards went to Miss Vera Brennan, broadcast supervisor of Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles, who received the Frank Silvernail Award; Leonard S. Matthews, exec veepee of Leo Burnett Agency, the Gold Key Award; and Gordon Gredell, D'Arcy timebuyer in Chicago, the Timebuyer of the Year award.

Loevinger's Bowout As a Trust-Buster

Washington, April 28.

FCC Commissioner Lee Loevinger will be giving up his international trust-busting duties, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy disclosed.

Loevinger told the Justice Dept. of his intention to resign as the American representative to the Restrictive Business Practices Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). He will formally resign after the May 27-29 meet of the OECD Committee in Paris.

He was given the post soon after leaving the Justice Dept. as Asst. Atty. General for Anti-trust.

Loevinger will be succeeded at the OECD spot by William Orrick who followed him into the Justice Dept. job after his appointment to FCC.

GM Explains on Nancy Wilson

General Motors, reported last week by Negro singer Nancy Wilson's agent John Levy to have dropped Miss Wilson from proposed commercial work because of the controversy over the use of Negro actress Ena Hartman in a "Bonanza" episode on NBC, counters that Miss Wilson was only under consideration for the blurb work and was eliminated as a routine matter.

Levy reported that the automative company, via Hollywood talent agent Charles Stern and Chevrolet agency Campbell-Ewald, had actually signed Miss Wilson, then shelved the project after the hassle with NBC over the Ena Hartman episode (GM wanted it shelved) hit the public prints.

A GM spokesman said that agent Stern has given the company a price on Miss Wilson, but that's as far as negotiations went. The blurb work in question was the Chevy radio commercials featuring vocalists singing the "See The U.S.A." theme. GM says the blurb made when Miss Wilson was under consideration finally featured a chorus of kids. This particular commercial has in the past featured Ella Fitzgerald, Eddy Arnold, Harry James and others.

for MURDER...

TV Running Documentaries Into Ground: A Lament From Chi's Birch

Chicago, April 28.

"Television has damaged the documentary by turning them out wholesale, on limited budgets and too often without imagination. People think of them as being 'no fun,' like those awful travelogs you sometimes see at the movies that cause the audience to let out a unison groan. When a documentary comes up on television I sometimes think I can hear that groan from coast to coast." This statement from a man who has a considerable stake in the documentary, making at least part of his living shooting, and sometimes directing, them.

William Birch, a freelancer, would like to see the networks concentrate on new approaches to the documentary to remove what he feels is a stigma that they now carry. "Obviously I don't think a ducumentary has to be fun to succeed, but I don't think they have to be as deadly dull as they sometimes are. The good ones fail to serve any purpose when the form itself has a way of frightening the viewer away. It's possible to make documentaries that people can enjoy as well as learn from."

He proposes as one answer to what ails the documentary a better marriage of the pen and camera through the development of creative teams who can learn to think and act in a kind of artistic harmony. Most documentaries are composites of disparate styles and attitudes, and that's what makes them so bland and impersonal, says. "The producer picks a writer from here, a director from there and a cameraman from there, and though they have a common goal there's almost no way to give them a common spirit."

Windy City Blasts East

Birch is one of those rarities, an independent Chicago-based craftsman who does his major work for the networks in New York. (The only other who comes immediately to mind is Don Meier, producer of "Wild Kingdom" on NBC-TV). Birch occasionally gets the call from John Secondari at ABC-TV or Gerald Green at NBC to shoot and direct special documentaries, and he has an arrangement with Reuven Frank and John Dunn (of NBC's "Huntley-Brinkley" and "Today" shows, respectively) to develop his own ideas for news features. He's done some of the Bell & Howell "Close-Ups" for ABC, some assignments for National Educational Television, and a number of overseas specials for NBC including the recent "Changing Matilda,' a 60 minute film on Australia for a "Chet Huntley Reports."

Birch, who had spent eight weeks there for the film, sees Australia as a land of opportunity for American technicians and directors. "Television is in its infancy there," he says. "For a long time they had only government network, and a commercial network is just getting started. The studios are poorly equiped — they've got the equipment in crates but nobody seems to know how to use it. Their news techniques are reminiscent of ours in the early 'Fifties, and the documentary is still unknown there."

He has always made Chicago his base, though he's had numerous shooting assignments in New York and has travelled over the country and over a good portion of the globe, first for Movietone News and later as chief cameraman for NBC here, before he opened his own shop some four years ago. The bread-and-butter of his freelance life (as partner in a firm called Tele-Features Inc.) has been a newsfilm arrangement with WBKB, the local ABC station. That's manned by three crews much of the time, when Birch himself goes off on network assignments.

One of those assignments had personal consequences. On a job two years ago to shot and direct a special on school drop-outs in Quincy, Ill., Birch found himself in exceptional rapport with the producer-writer. That was Mary Laing, then a mainstay of ABC News in New York. She now practices hausfrauery in Chicago.

WHO'S AFRAID OF JOE LEVINE?

Lurid Language May Be 'Mature' But CBS Ain't Buying

When blood-sand & art pix impresario Joe Levine cited a line in "The Nurses," a line which had a version of bitch in it, as an example of how tv is growing up, he found CBS-TV v.p. Mike Dann issuing a disclaimer that such slang represents maturity in tv. That was at the recent NAB convention.

Now, programming v.p. Dann, in a memo to all CBS-TV program producers said that the network has received protests about slang expressions from a "significant number of viewers." He referred to expressions such as "hell," "damn" and the like found in a number of dramatic episodes. Dramas in question were, in the main, from such series as "Defenders," and "East Side, West Side." Dann called for the reduction of questionable slang on the web.

4,000 in Vote To Strike at Philco

Philadelphia, April 28.

Production and maintenance workers at five Philco plants here, involving some 4,000 workers, voted to go on strike yesterday (Mon.). The action was taken by two locals of the International Union of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, after 20 hours of talks ended in deadlock.

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service reps worked until the last minute to forestall the walkout after a two-year contract between Locals 101 and 102 and the company expired Saturday (25). The Local 101 members cover Philco's radio and tv division, and the 102 members work in defense electronics.

Ford purchased Philco in 1962 and for the first time a representative of the auto company, Fred Meredith, production manager of Ford's consumer products division, took part in the talks. IUE officials attributed the company's stiff stance in the talks to the presence of the Detroiter.

Management proposals for changes in seniority, work measurement, overtime and temporary furlough procedures have their greatest impact in the tv, radio and hi-fi operations, work all done at the big Philco plant in northeast Philadelphia. A Local 101 official charged the changes "would return Model T working conditions."

A Philco spokesman declared that the IUE has refused to recognize that "if Philco is to survive as a Philadelphia-based company it must do so on terms equal to those afforded the company's competitors in the consumer electronics field." Management contends present practices at the plant are archaic and wasteful.

SI ROSE GETS NOD FOR 'McHALE'S NAVY'

Hollywood, April 28.

Si Rose is the new producer of "McHale's Navy," replacing Ed Montagne, who becomes exec producer of the series filmed at Universal City studios.

Montagne created and produced the comedy show. He will in addition to his "McHale" chores, be exec producer of studio's new "Broadside" series. Rose has been story ed and associate producer on "McHale," which has finished production for this season, and today begins lensing the first of two segs for next year.

WAYNE & SHUSTER'S 'HAMLET'

"The Elsinore Kid," an oater version of "Hamlet," is Canadian comics Wayne & Shuster's birthday salute to Shakespeare, to be aired in a CBC-TV hour-long network special May 4.

Solow Exits NBC To Join Katz at Desilu

Hollywood, April 28.

Herbert F. Solow, director of daytime programs for NBC, has been named general program executive by Desilu Productions, studio production chief Oscar Katz reported.

Solow exits his present job May 4 to join the telefilmery, where he will work directly for Katz. Before joining NBC, he was coast daytime program director for CBS; program director of NBC's California National Productions.

Features-to-TV Sale Assailed By Brit. Equity Prez

London, April 28.

Felix Aylmer, president of British Actors' Equity Association, lashed out at the policy of the major motion picture companies which sell off their product to television, in his presidential address at the union's annual meeting last Sunday (26). Their wholesale surrender of miles of all but recent films to their voracious rivals, at rates that bear no relation to the cost of production, must have been a major factor in the loss of their audiences, he declared.

The policy, Aylmer suggested, was apparently based on the view that motion pictures were as ephemeral as journalism. That may be true of certain kinds of hack work, but as far as they could learn, no discrimination seemed to have been shown. Material was shovelled out in mixed bundles, classified only by date of manufacture.

The Equity prexy averred that to repair the damage done to their business, they had adopted the gamblers' stock formula of trying to recoup their losses by doubling the stakes. They were determined to go where the baby tv screens could not follow, spreading sideways to the wide screen, still further to Cinerama, then "round behind our backs" to Circlorama, and would no doubt, proceed next to Sphericlorama, which would paper the ceiling and carpet the floor with their picture, before the theory collapsed. It was not surprising, he commented, that the centre of the industry was moving from Hollywood to Europe, where more straitened means forbid such extravagance.

Commenting on the closing of film houses, Aylmer believed that future generations would be surprised at the extent of the temporary decline of the cinema. The film was the only satisfactory means at present known of making dramatic entertainment permanent. It was, to acted drama, what the printing press was to manuscript, and its failure was as unthinkable as the disappearance of printed books.

Rediffusion's $1,000,000 25-Yr. Deal for Liberia TV

London, April 28.

Rediffusion, the wire-relay company (not to be confused with Associated-Rediffusion, the commercial tv contractor which now operates under the name Rediffusion), has pacted with the Liberian Government to set up and run a vidservice in Liberia. Deal, worth a $1,000,000 to the tv company, stretches over the next 25 years.

At the moment tv in Monrovia, capital of Liberia, is being run by the Liberian Broadcasting Corp. on one Rediffusion transmitter. It reaches some 50,000 of the city's 150,000 population. Rediffusion intends to develop the station in order to reach, by wire, Liberia's 2,500,000 population.

SG Ups Habeeb

Tony Habeeb, with the company the past four years, has moved up to become Coast pub director for Screen Gems, replacing Jim Hardiman who moved recently to CBS.

At the same time, Lou Dyer has been moved up as press info manager under Habeeb, and Harry F. Flynn, ex-ABC-TV, has joined the telefilmery as promotion manager. Habeeb in turn reports on his activities to Screen Gems pub topper Don Garrett in N.Y.

Looks Like England's Gonna Be Flooded With 'Pirate' Radio Setups

London, April 28.

Britain, it seems, is to be deluged with commercial radio — even though the Government has decreed that BBC shall hold the monopoly in local sound transmissions. For joining the decade-old Radio Luxembourg, and the month-old "pirate" broadcasting ship Radio Caroline, which are both successfully beaming commercial radio to parts of the U.K., are a number of other projects which, combined, could give this country blanket coverage.

Next "pirate" broadcaster on the scene will be Radio Atlanta. Like Radio Caroline, it is a ship-borne project aiming to feed pop music to these shores from a mooring in international waters. Again like Radio Caroline, owned and operated jointly by Ronan O'Rahilly and Jocelyn Stevens, Radio Atlanta was fitted out for transmission at the Irish port of Greenore.

It is being run by industrialist-financier Oliver Smedley and music publisher Allan Crawford and, some reports have it, the shipboard station will be operational some time in the next week. Areas covered by Radio Atlanta will include London and parts of the south east.

A fourth commercial radio station with designs on the British market is Radio Manx. Situated on the Isle of Man, a west coast offshore island which has its own Parliament, the station is being set up by an island bigwig T. H. Colbourne who hopes to boost the isle's economy with his commercial radio casts. Start of Radio Manx transmissions is tentatively set for this summer but some sources report the station may be somewhat longer than initially anticipated in readying its equipment.

A further shore-based commercial radio station, and probably the most powerful of all the "pirate" projects, is Station GB1, an offshoot company of Europe 1, a German-owned project, which is being sited in France. GB1, like the other commercial radio operators aforementioned, will have London sales offices, and will start with 12-hours-a-day transmissions later expanding to a 24-hour service (as and when advertising grows).

Hints and whispers of other radio "pirates" are beginning to abound as, it seems, there is little the U.K. can legally do at this juncture to stop "undesirable" radio transmissions reaching these shores from station outside British legal jurisdiction. One rumor, for instance, has it that a huge transmitter is being privately erected in Eire to serve both Ireland and the U.K., a unit which supposedly has the support of leading British concerns which are pro commercial radio.

Whether all these stations eventuate, however, is anyone's guess. Previous attempts—like Radio Ellen and Radio GBOK—wound before they got off the ground through either lack of finance or from pressure brought to bear from Post Office and legal sources.

Key consideration of course is the estimated support of local advertisers. Radio Caroline has allegedly been "deluged" with enquiries, both from U.K. and abroad. But so far, it has transmitted one commercial only, for an electric blanket firm.

Cy Howard's T-A Deal On 'Girl In the UN'

Hollywood, April 28.

Producer-creator-writer Cy Howard has made a deal with Talent Associates-Paramount toppers David Susskind and Daniel Melnick, for co-production of his new tv series venture, "Our Girl in the UN," a half-hour comedy aimed at the 1965-66 season.

Project deals with a "My Friend Irma" type of gal, who is a guide at the UN. Howard created "Irma" some years ago. He will pen the pilot, and if free from pix commitments, will also produce it. Howard has a pix scripting assignment at Warner Bros.

"Girl" pilot will be lensed in N. Y.

ABC, 20th Firm Up Air & Sea Series

Hollywood, April 28.

Resurgence of 20th-Fox TV as a vidpix production company continues, as ABC-TV firmed up orders for two more series from the Westwood lot. "12 O'Clock High" and "Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea," both hourlong shows, were ordered by the network for next season.

Previously, 20th-TV which had no series at all last season, has sold "Peyton Place," half-hour series to be aired twice a week, to ABC-TV. In addition, tv production chief William Self is in N. Y. showing NBC-TV brass the pilot of the hourlong series, "Daniel Boone," which is given a good chance for a sale.

'High" is a joint venture between Quinn Martin's QM Productions and 20th, with Martin functioning as exec producer. Irving Allen is producer of "Sea," and Paul Monash exec producer of "Peyton Place."

SALES, EARNINGS AT PEAK FOR ZENITH

Record first quarter sales and earnings for Zenith Radio Corp. were reported at yesterday's (Tues.) stockholders meeting, with color tv said to be contributing significantly to the company's sales volume.

Profits for the three months ended March 31, '64 amounted to $5,845,000, or 63c. per share after estimated provision for Federal income taxes of $6,078,000. This represents a 15% increase over the record first quarter earnings reported in '63 of $5,063,000 or 56c per share on the shares then outstanding.

Sales of $102,663,000, an alltime high for any quarter, were 11% above the previous record of $92,267,000 set in the first quarter of '63, and marked the first time in the company's history that quarterly sales had exceeded $100,000,000. Company called the Hartford, Conn., over the test of subscription tv, a coventure between RKO General and Zenith, now in its second year, "encouraging."

MURDER... ACTION... IMPACT... GRIPPING...

Meet Europe's favorite sleuth—Chief Inspector Jules Maigret of the Paris Surete. Maigret, bulky, human, unorthodox—brilliant creation of novelist Georges Simenon, who has produced more than 400 books to become one of the world's wealthiest writers of crime fiction.

Inevitably, someone had to make a Maigret television series. Top production companies competed for the rights. Simenon unhesitatingly chose BBC TV for its unrivalled facilities, its quarter-century of know-how.

With a dynamic team of leading writers, directors, designers and technicians, BBC TV set about adapting 52 of the Maigret novels to television plays. An equally brilliant team of actors was cast to fill the 1,000-odd speaking parts, and a 3½ year production program got under way—with extensive filming in France to ensure authentic background.

The result? Unprecedented success. Whenever the Maigret series has been screened it has won top audience ratings, top awards. In Canada, where it is currently shown under Alcan sponsorship, Maigret has even challenged ice-hockey for top ratings, with Nielsen giving the long-established sports program a bare two points lead.

EALISM... EXCITEMENT... TENSION...

In Australia, where Maigret premiered last fall, it immediately soared into the top ratings in ABC's 17-city network—as the Aussie leading weekly said " it has won just about every award a TV series can ".
In Britain, the Maigret series established a record by carrying off 5 top TV awards and reached a peak of 17 million viewers.
Now Maigret has come to the States. More details of this internationally top-rated series will automatically be mailed to all television stations within the next few days. Should you require additional information, please contact Peter Green at—BBC TV ENTERPRISES

KISS ME KATE
With Patricia Morison, Howard Keel, Millicent Martin, Reginald Beckwith, Irving Davies, Danny Green, Bill Owen, Eric Barker, Harry Rabinowitz orch, others Producer: James Gilbert
Director: David Askey
95 Mins., Tues., 8 p.m.
BBC-2, from London

Playing safe for the start of the new channel, BBC-2 chose this proven legit musical, imported Patricia Morison from the Broadway original and Howard Keel from the movie, and turned out an agreeable entertainment that was inevitably less stunning than both earlier versions. Musicomedy of this kind is never entirely satisfactory on tv, and the job of producer James Gilbert was to conceal the difficulties rather than to make improvements. This, with the aid of David Askey's assured, if somewhat unimaginative, direction, was achieved. Certainly, "Kiss Me Kate," with its restricted onstage and backstage setting, lost less than most of its kind by being reduced in scale, and it was good to be reminded of Cole Porter's luminous score and lyrics. Sam and Bella Spewak's book took more of a beating, and filled the breaks between the tunes without rolling any viewers in any aisles.

It was, in fact, the music numbers that clinched the attention. Patricia Morison, inclined to overplay the shrewish tantrums in the spoken passages, clicked in "So In Love," although her voice and personality had hardened for those with memories of her fine legit portrayal. Howard Keel repeated his rumbustious display of witch-taming, and was vigorously watchable throughout. He made much of the description of life with his ex-spouse's intended husband, and the scene registered strongly. Despite a certain self-consciousness that afflicts the gal when she takes on a character, Millicent Martin impressed as the dumb Lois, and took the full measure of her chief numbers, "Why Don't You Behave?" and "True to You in My Fashion."

Danny Green and Bill Owen made a neatly comical couple of gunmen, and registered in "Brush Up Your Shakespeare," while Eric Barker and Reginald Beckwith sharply outlined cameos. Paddy Stone devised adequate routines for the terpers, but scarcely did justice to the torrid implications of "Too Darned Hot."

Considering its eyecatching purpose, the production served it. But it used tv as an armchair substitute for outside entertainment, and this can be a limiting function for the medium. Otta.

JAZZ 625
(Ellington in Concert)
With Duke Ellington and Orch
Director: Yvonne Littlewood
55 Mins., Tues., 11 p.m.
BBC-2, from London

One of the most welcome features of BBC-2 is a weekly jazz spot, for aficianados have had a raw deal in the past. There's an impressive lineup for later "Jazz 625" segments—with Oscar Peterson, the Modern Jazz Quartet, and Dave Brubeck already pacted—and it couldn't have had a more formidable opener than this one. It was the first of two programs by Duke Ellington's band, taped before a live audience during his recent British tour. Yvonne Littlewood's excellent direction was exact without being tricksy, and each soloist got his camera due at the right time.

Ellington's items closely followed the pattern used on the tour, with classics from the repertoire inking it in turns with new compositions from his "Far Eastern Suite" and the Stratford, Ontario, "Timon" production. Ellington himself suavely hosted, and luminaries like Johnny Hodges (haunting in "Ispahan"), Paul Gonsalves (blowing his veins out in "Perdido"), Cootie Williams (growling magnificently in "Caravan"), and Ernie Shepherd (wittily vocalizing "Take the 'A' Train") contributed to a varied display. Ellington himself gave a gentle account on piano of "Little African Flower," and the orchestral setpiece was his potent hymn to "Harlem."

The show was briefly and unnecessarily introduced by Steve Race, and the only shortcoming was that the orchestra was too thinly spaced out and occasionally seemed lost on the big platform. Otta.

ELLA
With Ella Fitzgerald, the Oscar Peterson Trio, Roy Eldridge Quartet
Producer: John Hamp
Director: Philip Casson
47 Mins., Wed., 9:50 p.m.
Granada-TV, from Manchester

Like earlier jazz packages from the States taped by Granada-TV, this was a cut version of a concert at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester. It was the most successful to date, for producer John Hamp stamped on former tendencies to visual gimmickry and director Philip Casson concentrated mainly on vital closeups of the performers.

Ella Fitzgerald got most of the running time, and produced a triumphant display of all-mood vocalizing. In the uptempos, she was brilliantly inventive, seeming to relish the fine backing provided by Roy Eldridge's muted trumpet and the rhythm section. Highspots were her sizzling "Them There Eyes" and "Lady Is a Tramp," and her creamily dulcet "Every Time We Say Goodbye" and "Got You Under My Skin." But every song was a winner and it was a nice idea to pay tribute to Count Basie by giving a lyric to his "Shiny Stockings."

The Oscar Peterson Trio was also well up to its top form, and the pianist's dizzy fingerwork in "You Are My Heart's Delight" amazed by being both fast and musical at the same time. Again, the production wisely kept the camera close to the keyboard, and helped the excitement.

Maybe there was lack of variety and freedom in some of the angles — Miss Fitzgerald's right profile came under constant scrutiny — but the whole was splendidly invigorating. Otta.

JULIUS CAESAR
With National Youth Theatre company
Director: Michael Croft
140 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-2, from London

Both as a celebration of Shakespeare's 400th birthday and as a major production in BBC-2's first week, this did not come off. Michael Croft's National Youth Theatre, which gives young actors experience and young audiences an introduction to vigorous interpretations of Shakespeare, is a very worthwhile enterprise. This modern-dress version has been seen, and largely liked, in London's West End and various European countries.

But its virtues of spontaneity, enthusiasm, and freshness were quite lost in this televised stage performance. It showed up the deficiencies of the actors, who spoke clearly but, with the exception of Mark Antony and partially of Brutus, were all too painfully amateurs under this close scrutiny. Modern dress, and jazz interpolations, lacked novelty after the mild shock of lounge-suited conspirators had worn off, and Michael Croft's staging, while swift and striking for a live audience, was not conceived in tv terms and also lost out.

The thesps were blessedly anonymous, and it was just one of those things that look good when someone suggests it, but are mighty forlorn in practice. Otta.

THE SLEEPING BALLERINA
Writer-Director: Ludovic Kennedy
25 Mins., Thurs., 10 p.m.
BBC-2, from London

This was a touching and well-judged account of the tragic Olga Spessivtzeva, whom many ranked higher than Pavlova as a ballerina. Skillfully using stills, Ludovic Kennedy sketched in the years of her fame—the years also of Diaghilev and of Nijinsky. A scratchy, and moving, amateur film captured her as Giselle, and the part of the peasant girl who lost her reason was a harbinger of the dancer's later fate.

Dancer Anton Dolin described the painful scene of Spessivtzeva's removal from a New York hotel to an institution, when her mind finally gave way. And the program showed her, now happily recovered, spending a quiet old age at the Tolstoy Home outside New York.

As indicated, Kennedy told the tale economically, and directed it astutely. The indomitable workload of a ballerina was explained by her former partner, Keith Lester, and there might have been more indication of her earlier character and personality. But these questions were probably outside the scope of this very poignant anecdote. Otta.

THESE TWO PERSONS
With George Sewell, Hilary Banfield, Herbert Phillipson, Susan Beresford.
Producer: Michael Redington
45 Mins., Wed. 9:50 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from Birmingham

Hurling a couple of artists into a situation where, after a couple of weeks of getting to know each other, they face the cameras and make as if they had been married for years and had now acquired a whole string of problems, may have seemed a novel idea on the drawing board, but in actuality it was "novel" for only a few minutes before it wore off into tedium.

The mocked-up documentary style of the show, supposedly to illustrate the works going on to mend broken marriages, proved a drag principally because the show never lived up to its early impact as a sneaky insight into what makes marriages go wrong.

Thesps involved made a brave attempt at creating real people with real problems, but the end result was repetitive and inconclusive, proving nothing beyond the fact that both people had early childhood problems which they had been unable to master and, for all the help they were getting from the welfare workers listening in sympathetically, they seemed doomed as lifelong partners.

Production values of the show were sparse as befits an interview-documentary show of serious portent, but they did little to save an interesting experiment. Watt.

ARKADY RAIKIN
With William Campbell, Leningrad Miniature Theatre
Producer: Joe McGrath
45 Mins., Tues., 9:35 p.m.
BBC-2, from London

If Arkady Raikin were selected to indicate the enterprise of BBC-2, the guy who had the thought should get promoted. This Russian comedian, who reputedly rocks Nikita Khrushchev, proved to be an outstanding practitioner of pathetic comedy, with emphasis on the tears. He'd learned enough English for the occasion to get by, with some assistance from Scottish compere William Campbell, and, in any case, his facial play and exact miming were more vocal than his words.

The show largely consisted of a series of character studies, that simply illustrated a human theme. Thus Raikin was a nagged husband, with a mistress round the corner. He replaced wife with mistress—and it was his turn to do the complaining and the household chores. Similarly, he was a father trying to work and calm a bawling baby at the same time. Or a bachelor with a song expressing his delight in his freedom—which gardually shaded away to an infinite sorrow in his loneliness, using the same lyric. Climax was a quick-change feat that was startling in its speed and versatility, Raikin portraying various characters in an international hotel. He disappeared through one curtain to emerge through another completely transformed in a matter of seconds. Here producer Joe McGrath took the camera backstage to show how it was done, and added to the amazement.

Raikin is not a gagster in the conventional sense. His artistry is in his exact observation of people, and his humane distillation of emotions. He found no difficulty crossing the language barrier, and he should be acceptable in any country. Perhaps the most memorable moment was his miming of various kinds of walk, from the dilatory schoolboy's to the old man's; he illustrated the marching of military men, with a plea for their banishment. Otta.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF MARSHAL TITO
Narrator Fitzroy Maclean
Producer: Stephen Hearst Writer: Maclean
60 Mins., Tues. 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

The widening ambitions of BBC-TV documentarians, who are now taking on international subjects as well as more controversial local issues, were effectively furthered by this filmed record of Yugoslavia's leader and the tribulations endured by his people at the hands of the Germans.

Encompassing some harrowing newsfilm of the war-torn Slav nation, Sir Fitzroy Maclean, who led a British mission to Tito's partisans during World War II, filled in some details as to the character of a man who survived not only the Nazi's relentless attempts to wipe out both he and his band of soldiers, but the subsequent purges in Moscow which, under Stalin, eliminated several key non-Russian Communists from sateflite Countries.

Filmed interviews with Tito were skillfully deployed throughout an extremely well constructed documentary, but much about the man remained in the shadows. What was revealed was well presented with the deft use of newsfilms, stills and the narration of Fitzroy Maclean who obviously had more than a passing interest in the man.

Documentary was sharply edited by Brian Keene and Michael Bradsell. Watt.

MEET THE WIFE
With Thora Hird, Freddie Frinton, Brian Oulton
Producer: John Paddy Carstairs
Writer: Ronald Wolfe, Ronald Chesney
30 Mins., Tues., 7:55 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

It was from a segment of "Comedy Playhouse," BBC-TV's playlet skein, that the blockbusting "Steptoe" series developed. "Meet the Wife" has similar origins, and its

Sunday Night at the Palladium

Using a runout around the orchestra pit, this "Sunday Night at the Palladium" segment from Associated TeleVision opened up communication between performers and audience, and Jon Scoffield's direction suited the outgoing personality of Frankie Vaughan, who reliably topped the bill. Vaughan kept his act moving, and set a lilting pace with his opening "Always Be in Love With You," an oldie in cha-cha time. He got the customers clapping on and off the beat with "Last Day of September," and switched the mood for "Pennies from Heaven," delivered, squatting, in pensive vein. Easy human touches were forthcoming from Vaughan's dedication of "My Girl" to wife Stella and his closing "A Good Boy Now." It was a fine display of relaxed and undemanding warbling that never lost its grip.

American Beverley Todd, well received in the current "No Strings" legit production, gave added interest to the hour, but it was, as yet, a tentative display. A looker, and fetchingly demure, Miss Todd hadn't quite the glitter to carry off a sophisticated song-alog. In the uptempo "I'll Go By Myself," her voice lacked lustre and firmly struck below the note, but she recovered with a good "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and a brisk "Get Out of Town." The act was a curious mixture of simplicity and slickness, and fell between both stools.

Bright and inventive clowning came from Jo, Jac, & Joni—a trio who tumble and mug with slick timing against a background of comical musical instruments, that open up to reveal their lunch packs or concealed cigaret lighters. Emcee Bruce Forsyth was splendid, and the show's other ingredients were up to par. Otta.

Armchair Theatre

"Cradle Song," first tv play by novelist Hugo Charteris, was a pleasing and delicate study in relationships that didn't fully realize itself. It made an entertaining "Armchair Theatre" hour from ABC-TV, and had strong appeal for distaffers.

Set in the days preceding 1944's D-Day, situation was that Dru (Graham James), a young officer booked for the cross-channel trip, was invited for a country weekend by Emma (Fiona Hartford). She, too insistent in her play for the guy, lost out to her schoolgirl sister Susan (Suzan Farmer), and love bitterly-sweetly bloomed. This aroused mild jealousy, and it seemed doomed to die, which it dutifully did at Dru's death.

The script also included a potentially more impactful character, father George (John Phillips), a man with an outsize chip who vented his speen on his wife. But he stayed on the fringe of the action, and was largely irrelevant to it. Also present was a more conventional grandma (Fay Compton), deaf and opinionated, but it was in the deft playing, and understanding, of the younger generation that the piece took a grip.

Suzan Farmer was exactly right as the girl, and was well matched by Graham James and Fiona Hartford. Their elders were well taken, too, by John Phillips, Fay Compton, and Rosalie Crutchley, and Basil Coleman's direction of Leonard White's production subtly suggested the period wartime atmosphere without overemphasizing it. Otta.

Studio '64

Wrapped in an incongruous and highly offbeat serio-comedy, "The Close Prisoner" by Clive Exton, a scribe of some depth and dramatic force, brought to this Associated TeleVision Sunday night skein a serious observation of the gulf between real life and the superficiality with which most people view it.

Bernard Cribbins, as a non-hero whose torso mysteriously began to turn to steel, unfurled highlights of his life (depicted with some extremely well-used flashbacks) for a profile-type tv program. In the team's efforts to fit this obviously unique character into stereotyped pigeonholes, every real-life event the victim honestly related was either dressed up, played down, mutilated or just dismissed as insignificant detail.

Finaly, and making the point more forcefully, he died unnoticed and unglamorously in the tv studio while his parents chose to watch a "classic" deathbed scene—previously prepared by the studio—in which they "starred."

Piece was an unusual but effective study in misunderstanding and frustration and the author took the opportunity to knock several sacred cows—e.g. tv's symbolism—and took many a swipe at bigotry.

Excellent thespic work came from Bernard Cribbins, more bewildered by Society's reaction to his ailment than by the strange ailment itself. And good work too from Michael Gwynne as a tv director trying to make the incredible credible. Ted Kotcheff's direction was immaculate, highly dramatic and gave pace to the play. Watt.

TRADE OR FADE
With Bob Schulman, Dan Shannon, Bob McBride, Dick Hoover, others Producer: Kit Spier
Director: Chuck Snyder
60 mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
PUGET SOUND POWER
KING-TV, Seattle

This one hour documentary on the Pacific Northwest's stake in foreign trade was the most ambitious and extensive ever attempted by Northwest television stations. Conceived and edited by Bob Schulman, KING-TV's special features director, it was a far-ranging look at this region's trade with Europe and the Orient, which is declining in certain fields. It was impressive, dramatically revealing the importance of foreign trade and pointing up the fact that trade is a two-way street.

Pictorially forceful and interesting though the nature of the economic message pushed close to pedantry at times and it would probably have been more effective in a half-hour length.

However, the worldwide coverage of the foreign trade problem, so vital right now to the Pacific Northwest, in itself rates praise for the Crown Stations. The program represented seven months of work and 50,000 miles of travel by Crown staffers. Those involved, in addition to listing above, were Skeets McGrew and Tom Dargan of KGW-TV, Portland.

The program began tellingly with a Volkswagen mechanic in Wolfsburg, West Germany, munching on a Wenatchee apple, segued to a Wenatchee apple-crating foreman who drives a Volkswagen and emphasized the direct and indirect benefits of this exchange. Evidence of increasing interest in overseas trade by such regional firms as Weyerhaeuser, Simpson and the American Plywood Ass'n was well depicted. Problems of the apple producing areas of Washington and Oregon (20% of production formerly went to Europe; now it's 5%) were shown and Washingtonians told what they were doing to change this situation.

Success stories of some Northwest firms, all of whom have big foreign sales, some with production facilities abroad, were well presented. Stake of the Boeing Co. and its jet liners and upcoming supersonic airliner competition with foreign nations added interest and interviews with company executives in diverse industries throughout the Pacific Northwest, along with interviews with counterparts in Western Europe, England and Japan, punched over the two-way nature of trade and also forcefully showed that Europeans and Orientals in many fields are now as ingenious and competitive as Americans, that if trade is to be continued and increased we must compete in all phases, that just a superior product, for instance, will not do it Foreign preferences, promotion and advertising tailored for each country, are some of the elements that must be considered.

The program made clear that many of the problems faced by American business have national and international causes and solutions must wait upon action at these levels. However, the ways some Northwest businesses achieve success now were clearly shown and it is in these areas that the program was particularly good. The show, or segments of it, should get much use in the Northwest for future showings to business clubs and organizations and could have a strong impact toward solving the problems detailed.

THE POSITIVE APPROACH TO JUVENILE DELINQUENCY
With Dave Moore, others
Producer-Writer: Jim Dooley
Director: Clarence Anderson
30 Mins., Wed., 7 p.m.
WCCO-TV, Minneapolis

Flowers and buds aren't the only things that come out in the spring. The car swipers, muggers and other assorted troublemakers —all lumped together under the classification of juvenile delinquents—also come out from under the rocks when the weather turns balmy, and the citizenry raises its annual, indignant howl of "Why doesn't somebody do something?" Some cities, working in cooperation with the federal government and backed by federal funds, are doing something. Minneapolis is one of them.

This WCCO-TV documentary, one of a series of monthly reports on current affairs, studied the progress of the Youth Development Project which was set up

BOB ALLISON SHOW
With Bob Allison, Herb Carneal, others
Producer-director: Lloyd Bolcum
30 Mins. Sun. 3 p.m.
WTCN-TV, Mpls.-St. Paul, (tape)

In this red hot baseball area, where the Minnesota Twins led the American League in home attendance while finishing third last season, any tv show having to do with the diamond sport hardly could help being sure-fire. And this new entry in a well populated video field here should take its place with the others, especially since it's well knit and boasts a stellar Twins player as its star.

Produced by Time-Life's local indie WTCN-TV, it's built around Bob Allison who is one of the club's top performers. Judged by this initial 30-minute show in the once-a-week series, it gives promise of spilling interesting inside information along with expert opinion for the vast army of fans hereabouts.

This first stanza had Allison sitting at a table along with four other big leaguers, each a member of a different team, but all area residents. He queried them one at a time about their team's outlook. This part of the program, of course, had to be taped in advance of the season's start when the show debuted.

Next came a taped section from the Twins' Florida training camp, with Herb Carneal, one of the team's announcers and also a narrator for this program, interviewing Allison anent his feelings at being switched from the outfield to first base and how he thinks his team will do in the present pennant race.

For the windup there was a bit probably aimed especially at holding femme viewers. Allison questioned the young wife of Twins' third baseman Rollins. A very pretty bride of little more than a year, she must have given the show an added enjoyment for male dialers, too.

The show also invites fans to send in baseball questions for Allison to answer. Autographed baseballs go to those whose queries are used.

Producer-director Lloyd Bolcum, a WTCN-TV staffer, did his job nicely and Carneal fitted into the doings well. Inasmuch as WTCN-TV exclusively televises 50 Twins' games and has a number of other baseball shows, this new show should have little trouble in landing a sponsor. The game telecasts, with their enormous audiences, boast five prominent sponsors. Returning shows also re sponsored.

OPENING NIGHT FOR THE NEW YORK STATE THEATER
With N.Y. City Ballet, Robert Trout, Lt. Gov. Malcolm Wilson, Dr. William Schuman, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, others
Exec Producer: Ned Cramer
Producers-Directors: Ray Abel, Merrill Brockway
Writer: Ray Gandolf
60 Mins., Thurs. 9 p.m.
HAZEL BISHOP
WCBS-TV, N.Y.
(Daniel & Charles)

An impoverishment of production imagination by the CBS flagship notwithstanding, the blacktie invitational premiere of Lincoln Center's N.Y. State Theatre was a joy if only (as it turned out) for the New York City Ballet's rendition of "Stars and Stripes." A potboiler, sure, but withal the perfect choice for the occasion, and especially as it gave glorious range to the stellar talents of Jacques d'Amboise and Melissa Hayden. Both, to underline the point (and indeed the entire troupe), were in top form for this George Balanchine romp.

The state theatre, second unit of the Lincoln Center complex to reach completion, will primarily serve the dance and is to be home base for the N.Y. company.

To show off the theatre and the ballet, a tint relay was in order, but CBS remains one of the color blind. Yet even in b&w, the theatre appeared to be a stunner. Post-performance, in the theatre's capacious promenade, newsman Bob Trout interviewed some of the nabobs associated with the theatre (Balanchine, Richard Rodgers, architect Philip Johnson, dancer d'Amboise), and all, not suprisingly, were effusive about the glories of the new showcase.

In the pre-ballet portion of the program, the ballet orchestra launched with a "Marche Joyeuse," followed by brief speeches from Lt. Gov. Malcolm Wilson, William Schuman (he's prez of Lincoln Center), and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. None of them could manage the freshness and felicity of phrase the occasion seemed to warrant. But then the ballet took over and redeemed the hour.

WCBS-TV's cameras seemed sensibly deployed for the balletics, but the shots alternated in flat-footed fashion, as if programmed by computer. More than once a viewer pined for a zoom lens when d'Amboise and Miss Hayden had the stage to themselves. Similarly, the applauding audience was invariably glimpsed by static long shot. Likewise, too, the Trout interviews were all but lost for the busy background, when some tight shots could have been in order. Pit.

HAMLET
With Christopher Plummer, Robert Shaw, Alec Clunes, June Tobin, Jo Maxwell Muller, others Producer: Peter Luke
Director: Philip Saville
180 Mins., Wed., 8:30 p.m.
CBC, from Toronto (tape)

"Hamlet" is for everybody—or almost everybody—when it's done as simply, suspensefully and, despite its appropriate b. & w., colorfully, as this one, world-preemed on CBC's web, eight days before Shakespeare's birthday. (BBC, which produced it, in association with Danish Television, aired it four days after CBC, which nabbed the preem partly because BBC's drama chief Newman is a Canadian who till last year held the same spot at CBC-TV.)

This three-hour show, with only one 40-second break, was a triumph not only for Newman, but for producer Peter Luke and director Philip Saville, their superlative cast and their camera and sound crews (partly Danish). Also for composer Rodney Benwell for his fitting, unobtrusive score and Paul Arnt Thomson for his superb designs within ancient Kronberg Castle at Elsinore, Denmark, where it was shot in 14 days.

Absolute standout of all was Christopher Plummer who has matured tremendously since he played Hamlet seven years ago at Stratford in his native Ontario. This time he gave a virtuoso performance. Beautifully directed throughout, his soliloquies were marvels of the actor's art.

Equally standout, with in its limits, was the Claudius of Robert Shaw. His big soliloquy was spoken straight to the audience, with vivid effect. Above all, like all others in this remarkable "Hamlet," he was a recognizable person who might be met today, though his speech would be somewhat different. Beautiful June Tobin, was an excellent Gertrude.

Alec Clunes' Polonius was an old blatherskite but not a clown. Jo Maxwell Muller—whom Plummer saw playing the part on a London stage and insisted to appear with him—looked no more than 14, but her wildly demented scene sent shivers down the spine. Her brother Laertes was skillfully done by Dyson Lovell, as was Horatio by Michael Caine. Roy Kinnear was a delightful gravedigger and Philip Locke's Osric was a cameo.

One of many unusual touches was having the play scene done entirely in pantomime, with the "King's nephew" looking like Jean-Louis Barrault as the gentle clown in Marcel Carne's film classic "Les Enfants du Paradis."

OPENING NIGHT AT THE FAIR
With Henry Fonda, host; Carol Channing, Cantinflas, Fred MacMurray, Lorne Green, others Producer: Robert Bendick
Director: Kirk Browning
Writer: Louis Solomon
90 Mins., Wed. 7:30 p.m.
U.S. STEEL
NBC-TV (color)
(BBDO)

As can only happen in America, U.S. Steel plunked down in excess of $1,000,000 for a tv trailerization of that "Billion Dollar Spectacular" known as the N.Y. World's Fair. That, of course, was the NBC-TV "Opening Night at the World's Fair" 90-minute whoopdedoo which was brought off in RCA's most resplendent colors.

For this out and out commercialized translation of "big biz into show biz," U.S. Steel hired such luminaries as Henry Fonda as the host, along with Mexico's Cantinflas, Fred MacMurray, Lorne Greene, Carol Channing, et. al., in its sectionalized glorification of the Flushing Meadows spectacle as one of NBC-TV's top production crews, thanks to the wonders of pre-tape and pre-filming, put everything into sunshiny ship-shape order.

For what it was (probably the most expensive trailer in commercial annals), it accomplished its purposes admirably. There probably isn't a man, woman or child coast-to-coast who won't hanker for a personal look-see at the Moses mosaic.

That last Wednesday night's (22) special had little or nothing to do with the realities of the opening day's festivities was beside the point. The Civil Rights demonstrations and disturbances, the dank damp dreariness of the inclement premiere day, the picketing delegations shouting in counterpart to President Johnson's plea for tolerance and the wiping out of prejudices—these were left for the tv news boys whose on-the-spot coverage was exacting and forthright.

In sharp contrast, U.S. Steel's pre-fabricated showcase (with only a few minutes of the Henry Fonda intros and comments picked up "live") went about its glorification job unabashedly in extolling the virtues of the Flushing meadowland.

Some of it was more mysterious than entertaining, as for example the casting of Cantinflas to "helm" the International Section. Any resemblance between the Mexican's now-storied talents and his tv walk-through was not only coincidental but baffling. But otherwise, Miss Channing (who alone among the stars made like she was in show business) and the others deported themselves amiably. Primarily what entertainment the show provided stemmed from the talents identified with the various pavillions.

Nobody, but nobody, ever grabbed themselves such a trailer —and in tint yet. Rose.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Chrysler Theatre

Groucho Marx and the tv audience had some fun in "Time for Elizabeth," a comedy that came off despite its aged creakiness. Marx, as the lead in the play he coauthored with Norman Krasna, only occasionally did lapse as a thesp. For the most part, he and his cigar were all with it, creating a character who retires from the hurly-burly pressures of business to Florida, only to feel he's dying in the sun.

Marx's wife Eden had a featured role in the "Chrysler Theatre" Friday (24) night NBC-TV outing. She did okay as the femme fatale who played the field of the aged. Alex Gottlieb adaptation of the Marx-Krasna play should have been brought up to date with some reference to social security. Plot lines, keyed to an aged couple going broke via bad investments, would have played better had it been laid in today's reality of the "welfare state."

Roland Winters was the very model of a driving boss. Kathryn Eames, as Groucho's make-believe wife in the play, lent the right soft key. J. Frankhucas, as the owner of the Florida cottages for the retired who also sells cemetery plots, made a cameo gem of his role. Others in the supporting cast were fine.

Ezra Stone's direction had a yock provoking pace. Horo.

Chronicle

Once, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor played jacks on tv, when they were on "Person to Person." Another postscript to history — much of it in the same vein—was offered by millionaire Huntington Hartford, in Wednesday's (22) "Chronicle."

The half-hour had what looked like a simulated editorial conference of Show mag, owned by Hartford; an excursion to Paradise Island, also owned by the A&P heir. There was small talk about the carriage trade on that idyllic island; and talk about Hartford learning how to ride a horse; his concern about the family dog; etc.

There also was an interesting visit to the Huntington Hartford Gallery at Columbus Circle. Shown was a man of many parts and what may be one man's trivia may be another man's great concern. Exec producer Richard Siemanowski and producer Robert Rubin rendered the profile as seen through the eyes of the subject and his associates. Technically, the half-hour came off unusually well, with the sound track and camera following the principal and his associates through myriad sequences.

The half-hour had the naturalness of a candid camera — and some of its embarrassments. Yet, it was superficial in many ways. Not many people are good autobiographers. Horo.

Hollywood Palace

Guest emcee Ken Murray handled a corny but well-paced "Hollywood Palace" variety show on ABC-TV Saturday night (25).

Murray's w.k. home movies made one of the show's best moments with a look back at the New York Palace in its prime along with the sequence on Bing Crosby and Bob Crosby and guest Eddie Albert early in their careers.

Actor Albert, who has taken to the nitery circuit with a comedy and song routine, was funnier in the old Murray pix than he was in his guest turn. It had a long joke about a double-talking politician, and a song and dance parody on the Salvation Army—the kind of rib that should be passe.

Step Bros. opened with the sort of fast tap-terp stuff that made them one of the hits of the Jerry Lewis show. Aubrey the Magician is a really clever fellow in the ancient art, and his shrinking decks of cards routine is one of the best this reviewer has seen in the tv magic line.

In a straight song, there was Jane Morgan, who piped in her clear, strong style a fine and unusual bit of special material featuring familiar old waltzes. The British folk team of Chad Stuart and Jeremy Clyde have the same tailor and hairdresser as the famed Beatles, but managed to derive even more from the American Everley Bros.

In comedy, there was Rowan & Martin with an excellent takeoff on charades, and a windup mild burlesque poker game with Murray and guests and Ozzie Nelson, a surprise late entry.

Music of Les Brown and direction of Grey Lockwood combined to keep the hour lively. Bill.

THE 300TH HARVEST
With E. G. Marshall, Gov. Richard J. Hughes, Mason Gross, others
Exec Producer: Alvin L. Hollander
Producer: George Dessart
Writer: Robert Buttman
60 Mins., Wed. 7:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WCBS-TV, N.Y. (film)

This quasi-official telementary saluting the New Jersey tercentenary, produced by the CBS o&o in Philly and caught last Wednesday (22) via the net's N.Y. flagship, strove for some production distinction, but remained pretty much a classroom flicker.

Thus, its approach was in the hey-look-at-me spirit; but hopes it might have etched a more objective profile of the state would have been unrealistic inasmuch as the governor's office was associated in the project. Accordingly, Robert Buttman's script could be little more than exercise in toutmanship as it traced the territory's development with stress on the diversity of people and productivity.

For a gesture at balance, the hour juxtaposed E. G. Marshall's standup narration with a distaff heckler (simulating a Jersey resident), but she was unable to ruffle the official state line as voiced by Marshall. What little pictorial fascination there was to the hour came out of the vaults—the glimpses of inventor Edison, statesman Wilson, and the initial "Miss America" pageantry at Atlantic City. Pit.

IN THE HUNTLEY MANNER

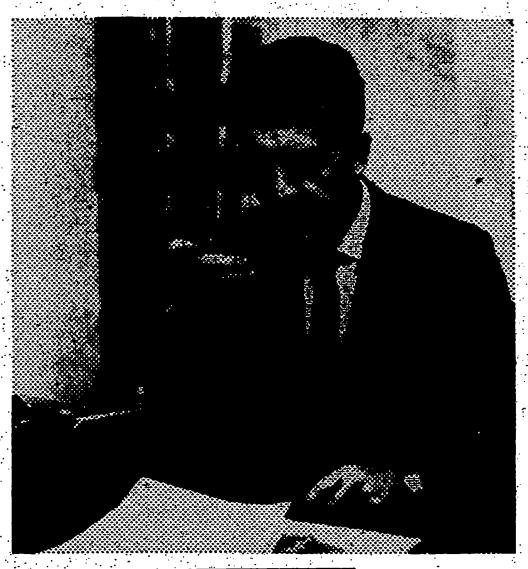
ON SALESMANSHIP:

"The Colosseum of Rome was built almost 19 centuries ago, dedicated by one hundred days of gladiatorial combat, naval contests and wild beast hunts.

"It is a mighty ruin now, situated in the heart of downtown Rome. A few days ago Italian police reported that an American tourist had bought it—actually paid $3000 for an option—and was complaining that the men he had paid had not returned for the rest of the down payment. What amazes the Italian police is not that a tourist would buy the Colosseum, but that the first such complaint came so late this year."

ON de GAULLE:

"President de Gaulle conducted a news conference today, his ninth such performance in five years. It was majestic, sometimes oracular, containing no shock value to compare with last January's veto of British membership in the Common Market.



"He said the Chinese Reds have been the effective government of China for 15 years and the rest of Asia cannot be neutralized without Chinese participation and cooperation.

"De Gaulle called upon Western Europe to get on with political unification and shake itself loose from American domination. With the French already spending about 3 times as much per capita on foreign aid as we Americans, he said he will increase it.

"His bid for a neutralist Southeast Asia got another cool reception in Washington. So we're right where we were with this Frenchman: he insults the other players, he ignores the umpires, his form is deplorable, but he just won't strike out."

ON MUSIC:

"The Beatles arrived in New York today and advanced almost to the Hudson. The four English musical stars—with their pudding bowl haircuts—were greeted by about four thousand shrieking teenagers at Kennedy Airport and mobbed by another large group of juveniles when they got to the Plaza Hotel.

"All day long some local disc jockeys had been encouraging truancy with repeated announcement of the Beatles' travel plans, flight number and estimated time of arrival. British journalists tell us that the record company had sixteen press agents handling the arrival, but we wouldn't know about that.

"However, like a good little news organization, we sent three camera crews to stand among the shrieking youngsters and record the sights and sounds for posterity. Our film crews acquitted themselves with customary skill and ingenuity and the pictures are very good—but someone asked what the fuss was about and we found we couldn't answer."

ON CYPRUS:

"Cyprus has been owned, from time to time, by virtually every nation of Mediterranean history, but the Greeks, it seems, were always there. The Turks came early in the 1500's.

"It's obvious that the Greeks and Turks cannot unite to govern the island as Cypriots. The constitution giving the Turkish community a veto power over everything down to garbage collection is impossible. So that leaves partition or repatriation.

"Partition would cut through the heart of towns and villages and might induce more violence.

"It should not be beyond the capabilities of Greece and Turkey, principally, and other nations, secondarily, to move the 103 thousand Turkish Cypriots to Turkey, paying them well for their property. That would permit Cyprus to join Greece. If need be, Turkey could be compensated with the Island of Rhodes, a Greek possession."

ON SPACE:

"The British have been conducting some delicate and intricate experiments in space at their station in the heart of Australia. The most sensitive and exciting experiments involved sending aluminum foil into space by rocket and recovering it. Also recovered, after a great many attempts, was dust from the far reaches of the galaxy. Dust and foil were sealed in a special container and sent back to Britain for analysis. It has been lost by the British Railways. The railway people say, in their own defense, that the scientists, who know exactly how to get around in space, put the wrong address on the label."

ON COMMERCE:

"International trade, that underestimated giant, is knocking over old enmities, crashing through alliances, and spurning hostile ideologies.

"Start with today's announcement by Khrushchev that a new trade pact with Castro has been consummated, purportedly guaranteeing Cuba a long-term steady price for its sugar. Both Castro and Khrushchev, in Moscow, declared that the deal will break the economic blockade of imperialist United States.

"Simultaneously, it's known that the Cubans have submitted a long

This is the sort of news broadcasting that has made Chet Huntley one of the two most celebrated correspondents in the history of electronic journalism. See him list of orders in London. If Castro can get British credit for several hundred buses, he may also get it for a thousand and one other items. Neither should it be overlooked that the British last year doubled their purchases of Cuban sugar to total 30 million dollars worth.

"Along with de Gaulle's diplomatic recognition of Red China, a trade deal is sure to go; and Japan announced today that she will take a 'more realistic attitude' toward trade with Peking in view of de Gaulle's imminent move.

"Even Spain, once the holiest of anti-Communist holies, is about to sell fishing boats to Castro. Germans, Italians, Belgians, Canadians and the Hottentots have been trading 'on the other side of the tracks.'

"And lately, when we inquire just what goes on here, our friends are likely to say, 'You sell wheat to the Russians; we sell buses, boats, light bulbs, or chemical plants.' And where it's going to end, not even Orwell would take a guess."

ON FOXES:

"The English fox-hunting set is facing serious problems in those areas where its activities border the new super-highways. Several instances have been reported of foxes nipping across through traffic leaving the masters of the hunt to call back their valuable dogs or risk them in the holiday traffic. The Duke of Beaufort is considering spending $100,000 to put up a special chain-link fence along the 20 miles where his estate borders one of the highways. Poorer huntsmen may have to hunt elsewhere or give up a way of life."

ON PESTICIDES:

"In Sweden, more than 20 thousand birds died this winter. At first, when men found the remains of birds on snow and frozen lakes, the cause of their death was a mystery. Government inspectors were baffled. Some suspected that the birds had been poisoned, so they sent hundreds of the corpses to laboratories, where tests established that the birds had died of mercury poisoning. They had eaten farm seed which had been treated with mercury to protect it against blight and rot. Birds that were still alive were found to be dying slowly of poison, as are thousands of others still flying. Swedish authorities say nothing can be done to save them. Traces of the mercury have turned up in eggs laid on Swedish farms, but no farm animals have died of the poison.

"In Great Britain, bulldozers are digging up a tract in Kent which was used as a test center for insecticides and pesticides. The soil was contaminated so completely that it must be taken away in barrels. The work crews scrape all mud off the bulldozers to avoid further contamination. The poisoned soil killed one herd of cattle. Farmers feared that rain waters would carry the deadly chemicals into creeks and streams, and that they would spread over a vast area. The soil was mixed with concrete and then dumped into the Atlantic Ocean. The purpose of the concrete was to make sure the soil would sink...and would not rise to the surface later to do more damage. All told, two-thousand tons of earth must be dumped into the sea."

ON WINE:

"Italy's agriculture department has announced it is cracking down on racketeers who have been adulterating wine. It is estimated that one-third of the wine sold domestically in a recent year was made not from grapes but from figs, dates, beans otherwise used to feed horses, dried apples, molasses, and synthetic alcohol."

ON AREA CODES:

"Arthur Bornstein, of Los Angeles, offers a 10-week course on how to improve your memory. Here is one of the little short-cuts he recommends. For example: how to remember that the San Francisco area code is 415.

"Because letters are easier to remember than digits, you learn a table translating all digits on the telephone dial into consonants. There are 10 digits, hence 10 letters. Translating 4-1-5 into letter equivalents you come up with R-T-L. That sounds like 'rattle'. Because the area pertains to San Francisco, think of the Golden Gate Bridge. Now think of a baby's rattle on the Golden Gate Bridge and you are immediately reminded that the San Francisco area code is 4-1-5. That is the suggestion of Arthur Bornstein, or whatever his name is."

ON ROYALTY:

"Finally, a recent luncheon of British journalists featured Queen Elizabeth's husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, as principal speaker. In thanking the Duke for his appearance, the Chairman explained why there were so many ladies at the meeting. They were reporters' wives, he said, and added that the Duke was the only man in the room whose wife was not always complaining that he never took her anywhere interesting."

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week five different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

Clairol, AT&T, Seven-Up, General Foods, to mention just a few of network tv's bluechips.

To put it mildly, the networks—who've just realized where Moses has led "their clients"—believe "it isn't fair."

But the advertisers, who've watched their Fair budgets swell, are convinced that diverting from tv is sound business. In any event, they sense in the Fair a brand of excitement and showmanship that has slowly drained out of tv. Then, too, they have reacted not only to the superior Moses salesmanship but also the opportunity to fashion their Fair exhibits and promotions to their own image.

As one top corporation exec, who diverted major budgets from tv to the Fair, put it: "The Fair gives us the showmanship opportunity to reach vast segments of the public with our own exhibit or program, like in the old days of tv when we could reach the public with a show we, not the network, thought was best to please the public and enhance our status with it. Mr. Moses doesn't tell us that if we come to the Fair, we have to sponsor a "spook show' or a "wild west" exhibit. He respects our judgment as we do his on Fair policies as to standards and tastes. In this way Moses—unlike television—has elicited both the money and the prideful creative ingenuity of American business. He knows he and his staff, even with the exhibitor's budgets, could not have built this Fair on their own. And yet tv managements—with a much bigger job—insist on doing it alone.

"If Mr. Moses ran a network, it would be sold out at his rate card."

BBC-2 Preems

noon when BBC-2 would normally be off the air. From Wednesday of opening week, everything was running according to plan.

First ratings of BBC-2 shows, as measured by Television Audience Measurement Ltd., the indie outfit to which the commercial web and ad agencies subscribe, are being studied now by tv execs—but TAM is not planning to publish them at this stage. BBC's own internally-kept ratings for the new web are also just up but, likewise, are not for publication.

Critics were generally pleased by the new station, but some made reservations about the use of the "dated", musical "Kiss Me Kate" and others wondered why BBC chose to screen a massive firework display which lost a lot of impact in black and white. Others knocked the goon-humor of a British comedy one-shot, "The Alberts' Channel, Too." But, overall, they found something to like.

And to a man they wished the new web luck.

Reflection of the Future

The formal opening of the new WTTG Television Center in Washington marks the realization of one of Metromedia's plans for greater service to the Capital and the Nation. The new antenna, the tallest in the region, increases range and picture quality. The new studios and expanded facilities will contribute to the further development of the responsible programming that has become the hallmark of Metropolitan Broadcasting Television.

Each of Metromedia's seven television stations across the Nation is deeply dedicated to community efforts. For over fifteen years WTTG has been a leader in bringing to the Washington area the distinctively specific local programming characteristic of an independent television station. WTTG's freedom to innovate makes it possible to better inform and entertain the community while reflecting local needs and views. WTTG's inherent flexibility of operation makes it possible to reflect the multi-faceted image of this premiere city of the Free World.

This has been true in the past, this is Metromedia's promise for the future.

did everything. You were not a dolly, boom or cameraman—you were all of these things."

In the formulation period, Diskin was also a scout, covering baseball, the fights and other sports to plot commercial coverage of same. In 1941, when the station went on the air commercially, his "primary" role was behind the camera.

He spent 46 months overseas with the army, including a North African hitch with Col. Darryl Zanuck to shoot an army-sponsored documentary for release through commercial channels. He says DFZ later invited him to work in Hollywood, but Diskin declined. "There's no excitement in that," he says.

After the old Blue Network spinoff from NBC, Diskin signed on as a director—and found himself working out of Philly's WFIL-TV, since the soon-to-be ABC net as yet had no video facilities in Gotham. At that point, of course, the cable connected N.Y., Philadelphia and Washington—that was the scope of networking, and Diskin worked a "handful" of shows from the Quaker City. He recalls the every-Saturday commuting to handle the Garden State turf action. Also recalled was the whoopdedoo when ABC premiered its Manhattan studios in '48.

Diskin, who particularly digs sports and news, has called 'em for some 180-odd fights, including the Gillette bouts. In 1960, he directed the third and fourth Kennedy-Nixon debates ("that was my biggest charge"). For the final joust, Diskin, employing some cajolery, brought both candidates closer by designing a set that shortened the gap between them to some five feet. Some handlers in both camps reportedly were dubious or plain opposed, but afterward, says Diskin, the two nominees agreed the new set helped heighten the immediacy of debate.

Carl Foreman Sparks

farewell party and chose him unanimously as Honorary President of the I.S.T.W.G.

Culminating his voluntary activities in Israel during these two months, Foreman, veteran member of the American show biz guild and trustee of the British Writers Guild, instigated the creation of the Israeli Guild, ordered from Mike Franklin, exec secretary of the Writers Guild of America, all the material, constitution, laws, International Association of Writers Guilds (to which the Israel Guild hopes to become affiliated) and other data.

Eighty students of Mr. Foreman's course had already chosen a committee, including such active writers as (Miss) Edan Shavit and Sam Zeba, Yoram Gross and Robert Gerry. The Guild would include, for the time being, only active screenwriters, radio and television writers, but would later consider the membership of playwrights as well.

The occasion of the completion of Foreman's course had been highlighted with a letter sent him by Prime-Minister Levi Eshkol, stating, among other things "I wish to express my sincere appreciation for your generous efforts and for your unique contribution of talent to our development. I hope we shall continue to benefit from your counsel and guidance in building the art and industry of the cinema in Israel."

The screenwriters' course, taped for release by a British record company and planned for publication in bookform (including Foreman's lectures), had brought forward, according to statement, at least four good stories, one of which when developed, might interest him also as producer-director. He mentioned stories like "Manhunt," by Yossi Godard, "The Bedouins," by Ammon Ahi-Naomi, "Everynight at Midnight" by Yair Burla, and Moshe Rashkes' "Night Hunts Night" (on which Rashkes had already begun the scripting and would continue to communicate with Foreman in London).

Ottawa—Ernie Bushnell's CJOH-TV here was named "Television Station of the Year" by Canadian Assn. of Broadcasters at annual meeting in Quebec City.

VARIETY ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots compete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and total area homes is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

Brit. TV Influence

the commercial majors included a strip scene in a current affairs program and got publicly rapped by the Authority for doing so. On another, a documentary program which included an interview with a stripper was barred by the ITA before it went on the air. And through most of last fall and winter there were outbrusts against "That Was the Week That Was," and the decision to terminate it at the end of 1963 because 1964 was election year, was widely regarded as a not-very-convincing device for getting rid of a program that was causing considerable embarrassment.

One of the developments causing some anxiety to commercial broadcasters is the increasing number of departmental chieftains who can wield blue pencil censorship powers. This represents a major change from the early days of the ITA when such functions were held by the director general or his deputy. Today, there are departmental heads for virtually every category of program, including drama, education, religion, etc., and these executives appear to be taking increasing note of program content.

This practice is not particularly welcomed by liberal-minded producers who feel they deserve the same freedom as given to newspaper publishers and editors. They take the view that, like the daily sheet, the tv program is "delivered straight to the home," and the program executive wants the same authority as is conferred on a newspaper editor.

The tv programmer is not impressed by arguments that there is already censorship for motion pictures and the legitimate theatre, though many a film producer who has been hurt by a censorship ruling has cast envious glances in the direction of tv, which is not subject to similar restrictions. There have been many cases of X certificate films, which cannot be shown in picture theatres to under-16s, which can be freely transmitted to the home screens and, therefore, seen even by six-year-olds.

Yoder & Lemon

made it an aggressive one. Jordan had spirited away more than half a dozen news writers and editors from WBBM-TV and began experimenting with news personalities, until he was satisfied with Floyd Kalber and weatherman Harry Volkman for the 10 p.m. strip and Charles McCuen for earlier chores. All were imported from other markets. Vet newsman Len O'Connor, meanwhile, was given a commentary show of his own that clicked even before the hard news did.

The Yoder-Lemon contribution was the stamp of "top priority" on news activities, and they have drenched the broadcast day with it. On weekdays, news is the only form of locally-produced program the station offers, with the possible exception of an occasional educational opus in the pre-dawn period. They've also backed it with extravagant advertising and promotion, and indeed the showing of the 10 p.m. news in the March ARB may have been derived, at least partly, from the $100,000 advertising splurge in local print media by the station during the months of February and March.

The judgment book verifies WNBQ's comeback in news (it once had "owned" the field in this market until WBBM-TV stole it away some seven-eight years ago) in the early evening as well. At 6 p.m., when the CBS and NBC stations meet head-on with 30-minute newscasts, it's a close race with WBBM-TV leading 12 to 10. However, WNBQ benefits from a stronger lead-in, with Huntley-Brinkley fetching a 10 in the preceding half-hour against Walter Cronkite's 8.

"Tonight" remains a phenomenon here. After losing the first quarter-hour to the tail-end of WBBM-TV's newscast, it goes up to a 20 rating at 10:30, doubling the CBS station's points for its feature film. The "Tonight" rating is extra impressive because both WBBM-TV and WGN-TV loaded up with strong movie titles for the critical March survey.

and dancing host of the NBC-TV "Telephone Hour" Tuesday night (21).

He was joined by the Pete Fountain four-beat Quintet and singer-dancer Gretchen Wyler in standard "Telephone Hour" production numbers (which are very standard). Broadway star Diahann Carroll provided most of the musical pyrotechnics with sock projection on her solo turns.

Show wound with a salute to the New York World's Fair, and there was as usual a Met Opera segment with coloratura soprano Gianna D'Angelo with a well executed popular aria. Donald Voorhees conducted the Bell Orch. Bill.

Ed Sullivan Show

Ed Sullivan's vaudeo last Sunday (26) went for a splurge on comedy. In the profusion of funnymen (three), it was hard to keep any one of them (none a headliner) long in focus.

Stanza otherwise billed Met opera's Roberta Peters, Al Hirt, the Kim Sisters, Peg Leg Bates and Little Buck, fiddle virtuoso Itzhak Perlman, and the acrobatic Ariston Trio. Typical of Sullivan's something-for-everyone instincts that generally produce a swift hour's divertissement.

Miss Peters lined out a Rudolph Friml potboiler that even the rubes must tire of by now. She was more interesting in tandem with Hirt, as the big guy's jazz horn accompanied some operatic trilling. Hirt himself (plus combo) delivered his usual entertaining trumpet melange. The Kim Sisters are by now seasoned on the Yank circuits and as always are able to fetch a simpatico reception. Sunday's outing, however, gave 'em little latitude for their multiple talents, and resultantly their impact was dimmed.

The grabber turns were the novelty displays — the awesome hoofery of Peg Leg Bates with sidekick Little Buck, and the amusing tumble tactics of the Ariston Trio. Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman fiddled with promised distinction, and was otherwise a figure of unusual interest because as a polio victim he performs from a wheelchair, which posture was played down with tight camera shots. Unless in deference to the artist, it would have been worth visualizing the handicap that, after all, doesn't seem to be one.

Of the comics, London Lee's monology is the lament of a rich boy. It is without insight or much humor. Georgie Kaye, a visiting lecturer in human behavior, has some zany bits that he triggers for generally amiable results. Third funster, Bob King, has some comic (and some not-so) notions of historic quotations that never got into the textbooks. None of the three was able to generate anything like standout impact. Pit.

borough (as FCC sees him) is chairman of a special subcommittee keeping tabs on political broadcasts and how FCC handles "equal time" requests.

Yarborough wanted free time from the date of the first McLendon political broadcast, Feb. 10.

McLendon thought he should receive it only from the date Yarborough first acted to use "equal time," April 10. On that date, Yarborough's campaign manager made the first request for "equal time" and sent tapes.

FCC gave Yarborough equal time starting with Feb. 20. On that date, Yarborough had written McLendon the first letter. Yarborough didn't specifically ask for "equal time" in that letter. Instead, he said in effect: "You'll hear more from me later."

Chairman Moroney

James M. Moroney Sr., in charge of operations for WFAA-AM-TV, has been elected chairman of the board of A. H. Belo Corp., parent company for the broadcast properties of the Dallas Morning News.

He replaces E. M. (Ted) Dealey, who continues as publisher. Joseph M. Dealy was reelected president and chief exec officer of the corporation.

Femme B'casters All Set for Tulsa

Fred Friendly, CBS News president, makes the principal address at the opening tomorrow (Thurs.) in Tulsa of the 13th annual convention of the American Women in Radio and Television. The Mayo Hotel parley runs through Sunday (3), and will include panels on film, advertising and sales and programming and production.

Incumbent prez of the group is Margaret Mary Kearney of WCAU, Philadelphia. President-elect is Elizabeth Bain, of Columbia Television Stations program services.

In addition to the nuts-and-bolts panels, a "roundtable" is slated on "The Broadcast Industry," for which AWRT has assembled NAB prexy LeRoy Collins, FCC commissioner Frederick Ford, and Leonard Matthews, exec v.p. of Leo Burnett ad agency.

Convention is also the perennial setting for McCall's golden mike awards.

Ace Brit. Footballer Quits to Gab for BBC

London, April 28.

Ace footballer Danny Blanchflower, captain of Tottenham Hotspur and the Irish international team, is hanging up his boots at the end of this month. He is to join the BBC as a tv and radio sports commentator.

For some years Blanchflower has been supplementing his sports earnings by tv appearances, newspaper writing and lectures. Unanswered question is whether or not Blanchflower will be groomed to replace Eamonn Andrews when the latter joins ITV shortly.

others will come when TFE works out a new relationship with NAB. Whether TFE gains a few more companies or loses one or two via resignations, it's apparent that TFE as an organization is here to stay. Plan is to have TFE retain its identity when film syndicators rejoin NAB. Plan also calls for TFE to act as liaison between syndicators and outside organizations, whether it be NAB or the station program directors, when such liaison is deemed beneficial.

What was once a once-a-year organization is slowly developing into what may become an industry force.

Church of Scotland Frowns on 'Bonanza', Palladium on Sundays

Glasgow, April 28.

Sex plays on tv and vaude shows are frowned on by the Church of Scotland as unsuitable for Sunday viewing. So is the tv western "Bonanza."

This was disclosed here when a foretaste was given of the influential Church and Nation Committee's Report, to be presented to the Church of Scotland General Assembly at its annual confab.

Val Parnell's "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" is considered unsuitable for Sunday night viewing.

But the Church doesn't frown on social programs, concerts and documentaries on tv.

The chairman of the Church & Nation Committee, Reverend John R. Gray, said here that Sunday television programs were aimed to satisfy the tastes of the South of England.

"I cannot believe that 'Sunday Night at the London Palladium' is the sort of thing Scots people would choose," he said.

Bridgeport, Conn. — Philip A. Cutting has joined WNAB as program director. He was formerly marine reporter at WHC competish.

IRISH TV & RADIO INCOME $8,400,000

Dublin, April 28.

Radio Eireann—Irish radio and tv service—will have an income of $8,400,000 this year, about half of it from advertising time sales, according to Kevin McCourt, Director-General of the outfit. Irish TV is in its second year of operation.

He says that tv side is operating in the black, but radio continues to be in the red. This isn't surprising as radio is only partly a commercial operation with time only sold in the mornings, at lunchtime and in a late-night segment.

Montrose, headquarters of tv service, is to be enlarged to provide facilities for sound service currently housed in studios it has occupied on a temporary basis on top of Dublin's general post office building for almost 30 years.

TV program switches for summer include dropping of "The School Around The Corner," which has holding No. 1 place in the TAM ratings; "Tolka Row" domestic serial, No. 4 in the charts, is out for some months; "Bat Masterson" and "Air Power" are also out. On the "In" side are the two-part "Wagon Train" series, "Margie" and "The Danny Kaye Show."

2d French TV Web Preems With Panning; Could Hurt Conversions

Paris, April 28.

The official weekend fullscale kickoff of the second state-run French tv web here, Sat. (18), generally got a thumbs down from critics. One even went so far as to advise readers not to hurry to convert their sets or get new ones to receive the new station.

Introed by governmental Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise head Robert Bordaz as a channel that will not be a pale imitation of the other but forge ahead, most appraisers disagreed with him. It was pointed out that the only new thing was three new femcees who were pretty and who were revealed to have pretty legs. Otherwise they generally agreed it was diluted regular fare.

A pop song program was thought wanting in conception and not up to those on the original setup as was a quiz show. The attempt to do essay-type news shows, via commenting as well as showing and telling happenings, was also pegged as disappointing. An adventure series "Rocambule" was felt okay with the top laurels going to a wrestling match as being the comic highlight of the first group of second chain showings.

However most agreed that it would have to be given a chance and it could settle down into better and more apt programming that would complement rather than echo the other one. Since January, the second web has been having weekend experimental programs and is now in the regular running with about 20 hours a week to the 50 or so of No. 1.

New one has 625-line definition to the 819 lines of the other. It remains to be seen how the addition goes and whether its quality will get better. Some sources feel that if it does not it may give private tv packagers and programmers a chance as well as maybe open a way for some kind of commercial setup. But this is mainly conjecture now as it gets under way.

Brosnan's Gab Deal

Jim Brosnan, the literary pitcher recently released by the Chi White Sox, goes into the ABC Radio weekend lineup with a quartet of five-minute commentaries starting May 9 from Chicago.

Sked calls for him to spiel at 9:35 and 10:25 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

here two years ago to attack the roots of j.d. The project has come up with some surprising and significant findings and is now seeking additional funds to put its proposals to work.

WCCO's low-key sizeup of the subject was largely a recital of facts. It pointed out that the fight against delinquency centers on keeping children in school and presented revealing interviews with school dropouts, showing the struggle these youngsters face in the business world. Additional talks with YDP director Larry Harris, police officials and social workers indicated the scope of the battle to thwart delinquency and impressed viewers with the involvement of the forces behind the scenes. It concentrated too much, perhaps, on environmental factors, giving the impression that all delinquents come from "disadvantaged areas."

In the main, the script by Jim Dooley, pubaffairs director of this CBS affiliate, was up to snuff. Dave Moore's narration, as usual, was articulate and held one's interest throughout. Program's main drawback was talkiness. Show made it clear, however, that the community is moving, although slowly, to take corrective measures.

Incidentally, local sponsors' interest in public service programs has been declining, and WCCO-TV had frequently aired this five-year-old, prime time series on a sustaining basis. The segs are pretty impressive proof that the profit motive isn't all that guides many tv stations. Rees.

THE WAR TO END ALL WARS
With Quentin Reynolds, others Producer: Joseph Gottlieb
Director: W. R. Higginbotham
Writer: Gottlieb
60 Mins., Fri., 8 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WNEW-TV, N. Y. (film)

Barbara Tuchman's WW1 book of a couple of years ago, "The Guns of August," touched off a publishing and tv fad over the "war to end all wars," with a flock of books now out and a network tv series on the way, besides a recent Wolper special and now this hour from 20th Fox Movietone vaults via WNEW-TV.

"War to End All Wars" was the usual patchwork of archives flickering footage, but noteable to a degree for its objective approach to WW I. Yank participation was hardly mentioned until the last segment of the show while narrator Quentin Reynolds concentrated on the political intrigues behind the battles.

An occasional humanizing touch was added as the host interviewed observers Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Burnett Hershey, Eugene Lyons and Eddie Rickenbacker. Film got a repeat on WNEW-TV Sunday night. Bill.

DEADPAN
With Buster Keaton, Fletcher Markle
Exec. Producer: Thom Benson
Producer: Robert Crone
30 Mins., Fri., 9:30 p.m.
GENERAL MOTORS OF CANADA
CBC (film)

Hal Roach Sr., of two-reeler fame, wants to do a version of "Cleopatra" with Jayne Mansfield in the titular role and Buster Keaton as Marc Anthony, the classic comic told Fletcher Markle in this well-handled interview (filmed for CBC in Keaton's San Fernando Valley home).

Keaton told of a "Grand Hotel" rib that never jelled, in which he'd have been Kringelstein, actually played by Lionel Barrymore), with Marie Dressler in the Garbo and Jimmy Durante in the John Barrymore roles. He said his top grossers were "Navigator," "Hospitality" and "The General"—the one revived by film societies. Keaton said he had three idea men, Chaplin about the same and Harold Lloyd "five or six." He worked hardest—"Chaplain was too lazy and Lloyd had all he needed." He also said Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle directed "about half" of Chaplain's "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and was second only to Chaplin in b.o. take.

Kansas-born Keaton, still unsmiling, gave the recipe for making custard pies to throw at brunettes (blueberry for blondes) and how to hurl them accurately 27 feet, his record. He said he played Shea's Toronto with his parents in the Keaton-Houdini Show, with the great magico Harry Houdini, who remarked when young Keaton fell down a flight of stairs. "That's some buster!"—hence his screen name.

They didn't discuss "10 Girls Ago," the color musical starring Keaton, Bert Lahr and Eddie Foy Jr. which Ed Collin's AmCar Productions made in Toronto two years ago, but which has never raised the money for editing.

Keaton gave a generous tribute to Red Skelton: "Nobody can do a better screen scene without opening his yap." His succinct advice was "Don't ever lose your temper; don't want the world." Gard.

THE INNER CITY
With Jack Ware, Bob Davies, others
Producers: Bill Miller, Maurie Helle
Director: Fred Catania
Writers: Miller, Helle
45 Mins., Wed., 9:30 p.m.
KOOL-TV, Phoenix (tape)

"The Inner City" is the first of a series of projected documentaries plotted by KOOL-TV g.m. Homer Lane to spotlight the charm and evils of Phoenix and it's satellite communities. He has wisely dumped his project into the laps of producers Bill Miller and Maurie Helle, a pair of young go-getters who exude a marvelously naive air about their new choir.

In this "Inner City" segement, penetrating cameras probed a 23 square mile area of neglected, festering ghetto, in an astonished "can things like this really be" mien. In this era of the glib, surefooted, pseudo ultra articulate smoothie—Miller & Helle's hesitant, sympathetic approach to this subject was charming.

The problem is a typical of all exploding metropolises. As cities mature and suburbia becomes more attractive to the neo-prosperous, the downtown periemeter is abandoned to rot and manufactures a vacuum to be filled by the unemployable parlahs who in turn lure a gaggle of ruthless piranhas to feed on their miseries. This is not the fable of a rudderless skid-row. KOOL's "Inner City" is populated by sincere, desperate people whose meagre tools are unable to cope with the world around them.

What is the answer? Interviews conducted by Jack Ware and Bob Davies with respected ministers, teachers, business and professional men suggested a vocational high school, paved streets, better lighting and most important, a major industrial development to revive the area's economy and employe its people so that they can join the mainstream of this city's economy. O'Haf.

THE UNTAXABLES
With Robert C. Cochrane, narrator
Producer: Robert C. Cochrane
Director: Janet Covington
Writer: George Gipe
30 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
WMAR-TV, Baltimore (film)

WMAR-TV editorial-documentaries become smoother and smoother as they go on and "The Untaxables" is good evidence of this progress. This was an examination of suit filed in circuit court by Madalyn Murray, plantiff in Supreme Court school-prayer and Bible reading case, who in this case, is attempting to cancel tax exemptions for churches.

Hospitals, churches, synagogues, fraternal organizations and cemeteries, along with some 50 more categories of property-holders, are exempt from real estate taxation under Maryland law.

Mrs. Murray wants to change this and WMAR-TV gave a pro and con treatment to the situation. Mrs. Murray, a dedicated athiest, gave her reasons for suit and others who took part were representatives of Catholic and Protestant churches, Hyman A. Pressman, Baltimore city comptroller and Dr. Hurst Anderson, president of American U.

Robert C. Cochrane, WMAR-TV assistant manager, programs, concluded with an editorial in which he sided with churchmen and not Mrs. Murray.

There was less self-conscious waiting on the part of the participants in this documentary and comments by Mrs. Murray and those who oppose her, made the listener listen.

Another improvement was Cochrane, who sounded more authoritative and less calculating and therefore is smoother and more convincing in his delivery.

Interest is what documentaries should have, "The Untaxables" had it, plus better than average treatment. Luce.

Expand Com'l TV Fest to 2 Days

American TV Commercials Festivals will be expanded from a one to two-day affair this year with screenings and cocktails set for May 14 and the awards luncheon set for May 15 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

On Thursday (14), beginning at 9:30 a.m., there will be all-day screenings of finalists in all 40 product categories with special times set for each. Reception will follow at 5 p.m. sponsored by the Film Producers Assn. of New York. Second day will feature workshops and awards lunch as previously.

Fest director Wallace Rose is pitching ad men around the country via mailer to attend the New York presentations, bring the family and catch the New York's World's Fair over the weekend.

VIPers Go D.C.

The Broadcasting Mission to Europe, circa 1945, which has maintained cohesive contact ever since via at least one official annual get-together, does its stuff Thursday evening, May 14, at the City Tavern Assn., in Georgeton, Md. There are other festivities planned for the VIUers' wives for that weekend under the aegis of this year's capital host, Lester W. Lindow, executive director of Maximum Service Telecasters Inc. Some 15 radio (this was pre-tv) and tradepress VIPs comprise the VIPers, as it has been loosely evolved.

Idea of seeing Kalamazoo's John Fetzer's Detroit Tigers play the Senators in Washington will not materialize because dates did not jell. Fetzer was part of the 17 who made the 1945 European safari under governmental auspices. A 20th anni reunion in Paris is planned for next year.

And the future? Mardonnell insists that "If we went five more years I feel that all the principals would be happy to go along with it." Of actors queried, Miss Blake, Milburn Stone and newcomer Burt Reynolds (this his third season) stated emphatically that, indeed, they would be happy to go on indefinitely. Arness, snoozing peacefully in his dressing room, was unavailable for comment and newcomer Ken Curtis was missed in the canvass, but Macdonnell beleives that they would voice similar opinions. Arness, of course, is the key man, his production company producing skein for CBS-TV.

Paul Henning to Helm 'Petticoat Junction'

Hollywood, April 28.

Paul Henning has named himself as producer of "Petticoat Junction," replacing Dick Wesson, who is exiting the CBS-TV series at the end of this season.

Henning created "Junction," which debuted on the web this past season. Previously, the producer-writer had created "The Beverly Hillbillies," No. 1 in the ratings, and also a CBS-TV show.

Henning will continue to produce "Hillbillies," in addition to taking over on "Junction."

H'wood Trims Guestar Tabs

ent to "gullible casting directors, over-anxious producers, and misguided actors who allow their agents to do this. As a group they (the actors) hurt themselves. Ultimately the industry will begin to do what N. Y. has been doing — impose lower tops for guests on series." The casting exec emphasized he was not speaking on behalf of the network for which he works, but as an individual who has had experience as a casting director.

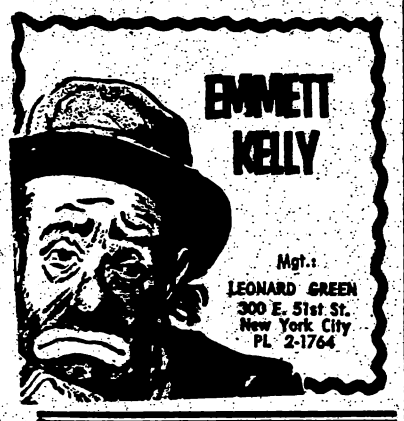
Referring to Screen Actors Guild prexy Dana Andrews' complaint that the vidifilmeries are lowering guest prices, Wookey commented he has respect for Andrews as an actor, but that he "is just a little behind the times. Andrews is a fine performer, and naturally is in favor of the actors getting more money. But he complains about the long hours and pressure involved in tv production. This is true. But that is the nature of tv production, and it applies to everyone—those behind the scenes, including those who earn far less than actors."

Wookey said that there was an "enormous" amount of new acting talent which is very "capable," and that the "$5,000 players who are disgruntled will find as long as their agents insist on this kind of money, ultimately and hopefully this new talent will replace and supplant the stars. This new talent will get new blood into tv, which is to SAG's advantage."

He is launching a hunt for new talent for the network, Wookey disclosed. He labeled statements of the "old guard" of actors "arbitrary," and reiterated that "hopefully, the new talent will supplant them."

SAG prexy Andrews earlier had charged that aware many actors today are unemployed, the telefilm production companies have "systematically" lowered the prices of acting talent. The check of telefilmeries verified guestar tabs are being cut.

"The plight of the actor today is pretty horrible," and those fortunate enough to find work are forced to work long hours and under great pressure because of telefilm's quick shooting skeds and low budgets, the actor had said.



Andrews had disclosed that only 8,000 of SAG's membership of 15,000 are working. "The actor today is in the advertising business. He is not in the acting profession. He is paid not on the basis of whether he is good or bad. The networks have a tri-opoly," he said, referring to the fact that there are only three networks.

"Local stations can't afford to pay actors. So if the actor doesn't get a job on a show in prime time, he doesn't work. If this system doesn't stop, we will be making the lowest quality product in the world. A show is sold on the basis of whether or not it sells goods, not whether or not it is a good show," Andrews declared.

Andrews labeled Revue studios "one of the great offenders." He cited as an illustration that where top price for guestars on that studio's "The Virginian" was once $15,000, it's now down to $5,000.

with football and their tampering with its traditions. He said:

"This coming year, for the first time, a major college bowl game will be played at night—the Orange Bowl in Miami, Fla.—to fit the demands of television. This will enable NBC to present a full day of football on Jan. 1, from the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans at 2 p.m., to the Rose Bowl in Pasadena at 5 p.m., to the Orange Bowl in Miami at 8 p.m. Some weekends fans will be able to see as many as four and five football games over Saturday and Sunday. Everybody, from the networks to the colleges to the pros, are eager for a slice of the advertising dollar. But in so reaching, they may be killing the goose that lays the golden egg."

He noted that the Professional Golfers Assn. is aware of the overexposure hazard and is refusing to permit any more telecasting of its events until some of the current golf tournaments are dropped from the tv schedules.

"Television, possibly through no fault of its own, has contributed to the uneven baseball race," Kupcinet pointed out. "Whereas in pro football, tv revenue is divided equally among all the teams, so that the weaker ones get the exact sum as the champions, the baseball teams each negotiate for themselves. TV naturally would rather telecast the Yankees than the Senators, and consequently the Yankees get richer and thus are able to buy better players. The lowly teams that need help most benefit least from tv."

Kupcinet listed some of the concessions that football has made to television. There is, he says, an automatic time out at the end of 10 minutes, if neither team has taken a time out, to accommodate a tv commercial Following a touchdown there's another delay for commercial that wasn't in the original script. Where once football and baseball games started right on time, at 2 p.m. or 8 p.m., now there's always a slight delay so the sportscaster can set the stage. And further, he pointed out, with CBS intent on using 18 commercials (instead of 16) in the highly expensive National League football games, there will have to be more concessions which will bring more delays to the game.

Kupcinet sees NBC as also hurting the sport. He said that in laying out $36,000,000 for a five-year pact with the American Football League, NBC added a proviso that the league must expand, ready or not, to some of the larger cities in order to give the sponsors more major markets. "With the ordered expansion, and the already great drain on players, the calibre of AFL football is sure to drop a notch or two below its present standard, which is already below that of pro football of recent years," he said.

Ladybird Yields ON CATV Option

Washington, April 28.

The Austin, Tex., CATV firm with the Mrs. LBJ connection threw in the towel in its argument with FCC over whether it had to turn over to FCC a copy of the option agreement under which KTBC-TV (Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson's station) has the right to purchase up to 50% of the stock.

Capital Cable Co., Inc., of Austin, delivered a copy of that agreement to FCC after twice refusing to do so. Eugene L. Burke, counsel for Capital Cable, had previously challenged FCC's right to require it to provide a copy of the agreement since it is a wired CATV system not under FCC jurisdiction. Burke had further argued that public disclosure of the agreement's contents would work to the competitive advantage of its CATV rival, TV Cable of Austin, Inc.

In connection with the latter, FCC had told Burke that if the commission determined that disclosure of any section of the agreement would harm Capital Cable competitively, FCC would insure secrecy of it. But, FCC added, the commission itself wanted to see all of the agreement.

Burke turned it over on that basis, with FCC to be the judge of what is and what isn't made public in the agreement.

Scot TV's 'Police Call'

Glasgow, April 28.

Scottish Television Ltd., commercial tv program company for Central Scotland, launched a new five-minute series of programs "Police Call," with the cooperation of police forces throughout the area.

Aims to help police in all forms of crime, and to make the public aware of crime trends. Telecasts are live, and a senior police officer will be in the studio control-room during transmissions to cope with last-minute developments. Series is arranged in collaboration with the Central Criminal Records Office in Glasgow.

Slim Hopes For a 2d Com'l TV Channel in Britain Before '68

London, April 28.

A second commercial tv channel is considered to be a dead issue before 1968, and could even prove to be a non-starter then, if BBC-2 gives off more than about 10% of the existing ITV audience. This is the considered view of top insiders, who have been actively involved in recent legislative developments.

Expert opinion has calculated that commercial tv interests must continue to hold about 60% of the viewing audience if a second ITV channel is to be economically viable. So anything more than a fractional drop in the existing ratios between ITV and BBC could upset the calculations.

This expert opinion is not shared by all the commercial programming companies, some of which have been maintaining an almost day by day agitation in favor of a second channel. They are not united on the issue, however, and at least one of the majors is content with the status quo.

The new licences for commercial tv's second term, which starts at the end of July, are limited in the first instance to a three-year period—just in case there is a Governmental greenlight for an opposing channel.

Roberts-Amory Tandem Vice McCarthy on WPAT

WPAT, the Paterson (N.J.) radio station covering metro New York, undergoes a switch in its morning newscasts next Monday (May 4) when Kenneth Roberts takes over for Charles F. McCarthy. Besides Roberts, the three morning 15-minute newscasts will feature a segment Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays by Cleveland Amory on "culture and mores."

McCarthy has been doing the morning shows at 6:30, 7:30 and 8:30 since Capital Cities bought the outlet. Roberts has been freelancing for WCBS lately. WPAT's segue music segs remain the same, and the five-minute newscasts throughout the rest of the day and night continue in co-op deal with N.Y. Herald Tribune.

Brit. Anglia-TV's 407G Net Profit

London, April 28.

Anglia-TV—an east coast regional commercial tv station which, on a financial basis, is poised dead centre between the big-coin majors and the small-dough indies which are scattered around the country—in the last full year before the levy on tv advertising is imposed, showed an improved group profit for the year ended Oct. 31, 1963.

Net profit hiked from $377,922 to $407,215 after tax of $580,502 against $560,000.

Dividends paid of 30% on capital increased by a one-for-two scrip issue, compared with the previous equivalent of 26⅔% and require $169,784 against $150,920. General reserve receives $140,000 ($308,000).

Among other things, the Anglia-TV policy of stabilizing costs wherever possible resulted in the profit from tv being only slightly below that of 1962. Reduction in loan stock interest resulted in an increase of some 5% in pre-tax profits.

Killgore Buys KUAM

Washington, April 28.

FCC's Broadcast Bureau approved the $650,000 sale of KUAM-AM-TV, Agena, Guam from Radio Guam to Pacific Broadcasting Corp. Pacific, owned by H. Scott Killgore and Samuel Rubin, purchased the controlling stock in KUAM from Phillip Berg.

Killgore has interest in California stations KALI-AM, San Gabriel; KECC-TV, El Centro and KOFY-AM and KUFY-FM, San Mateo and KUDL-AM, Fairway, Kans.

openng episode, "The Bed," was a repeat from the "Playhouse" half-hour and served to introduce the partnership of Thora Hird and Freddie Frinton. So long as scribes Wolfe and Chesney con keep up this farcical pace, the series should nudge its way into the higher ratings. Miss Hird makes an appealing and human figure of the conventional nagging wife, with Frinton neatly longsuffering as her husband.

Initial situation was the couple's acquisition of a new bed for their 25th wedding anniversary. The old one dipped and soared like a camel's back. Trying out the bed in a store, settling into it at home, squabbling over which side to occupy—all this bubbled agreeably and provided warm, efficient and simple yocks. The North-country flavor of the principals gives it an edge, and John Paddy Carstairs, as producer showed that the flair for this kind of foolery, acquired over many movies, has not deserted him.

Writers: Verde, Castellano, Pipolo, Mattoli
Director: Mario Mattoli
65 Mins; Sun. 10:15 p.m.
RAI-TV, from Rome (tape)

Latest variety show launched by RAI is actually several months old, and shows its age occasionally in a lack of topicality and freshness. This is especially so in pop songs, most of which have aged while the show remained on the shelf.

As for the program itself, it's a somewhat nostalgic reminiscence of a very popular stage series of the '30s by the same name, and there's an attempt to revive this humor today; it does not always come off or blend with the present variety displayed in other parts of show. Canned laughs give artificial flavor.

"Za Bum" accents spoofs. Initial stanza had an okay bit on serialized dramas, about a father who doesn't want his son to study serious music, but become a pop singer. Another was the old chestnut showing a man switching channels and getting risible juxtaposition of sentences. And so on.

Fred Bongusto sang some new songs well, Liana Orfei dittoed with some oldies, and the dancers were better looking than their routines.

THE GOOD OLD DAYS
With Jimmy Edwards, Denny Willis, Eira Heath, the Morlidor Trio, Lilian Kenny, the Playmates, Manton Brothers, Ballet Montmartre, Leonard Sachs, orch Under Bernard Herrmann
Producer: Barney Colehan
50 Mins., Fri., 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Long before music-hall was taken up by the commercial web and by London legit managements, BBC-TV launched "The Good Old Days," taking City Variety Theatre, Leeds, Yorkshire, as its venue and concentrating on a meticulous recreation of Edwardian atmosphere. Even the live audience must provide its own costumes before it is admitted. This special edition is an astute choice for the web's entry in the Montreux tv fest. It's as English as Yorkshire pudding, fish-and-chips, and Sir Alec Douglas-Home, and it has the virtue of being a particularly indigenous product, impossible to imitate successfully elsewhere.

Barney Colehan, who has produced the show since its inception, used outside-broadcasting techniques of mobile and peripatetic cameras to transmit the full, fruity flavor, and the segment assembled a clutch of acts that mostly suited that old, nostalgic feeling. Anchorman, as usual, was the grandiloquent Leonard Sachs, who indulged in dizzy alliteration in the vein of oldtime vaude chairmen and fitted that part to the last syllable. The only error in an otherwise faultless recreation was the use of updated music as backing to one of the acts.

Said acts displayed more charm than wit, although the Morlidor Trio scored with a triple-jointed display of acrobatics (one of them making as a strawfilled golliwog), Lilian Kenny produced elegant and smooth gyrations on the aerial trapeze, and Eira Heath was sweetly tuneful in a couple of bewhiskered oldies. Performing highspot was Jimmy Edwards, who climaxed the show with uninhibited clowning on a musical theme; he had the vigor and effortless audience rapport of such past masters as Billy Bennett and George Robey.

GLI ITALIANI DEL CINEMA ITALIANO
(The Italians of the Italian Cinema)
Director: Alessandro Blasetti
Writers: Blasetti, Luigi Chiarini, Fernaldo di Giammatteo
95 Mins.; Fri. 9:15
RAI-TV (2nd Channel), from Rome (tape, film)

Alessandro Blasetti, one of Italy's vet directors, retraced recent (postwar) Italian history via significant pic clips from the top films of the '40s and '50s in this show. Series is also copping a plea in pointing to significant achievements of local filmmakers in the postwar era, now that industry's future is at stake pending renewal of aid legislation for Italian films. The timing is apt.

Meanwhile, televiewers are in for a treat in re-viewing some of the local industry's top moments, in such pix as "Open City", "Tutti a Casa", "Violent Summer", "Four Days of Naples", and others, all of them indicating that local films have done an outstanding job in documenting recent and not-so-recent events.

Format of the series, in weekly installments, leads with series of interviews with top film personalities (Paul Newman, Shirely Clarke, Gregori Alexandrov, and others), many of them lensed at the last Venice Film Festival, all speaking flattering words about Italy's film contributions spotlighted in the current series. Blasetti's choice and editing of segments and excerpts is very savvy and smooth.

RUPERT OF HENTZAU
With Peter Wyngarde, Barbara Shelley, John Phillips, Tristram Jellinek, George Baker, Sally Home, John Breslin, Jean Harvey, Frederick Piper
Producer: Campbell Logan
Director: Gerald Blake
Writer: Donald Wilson
25 Mins., Sun., 5:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Ruritania rides again in this crisp and actionful adaptation of Anthony Hope's sequel to "Prisoner of Zenda," which was used in the Colman movie version, to trail this skein a couple of weeks before. The tale is being told in six segments, and Donald Wilson crammed an agreeable amount of plotting into the initialler, as well as neatly deploying the situation left over from "Zenda."

Rupert (played with devilish elan by Peter Wyngarde) has returned to Ruritania to stir up trouble. This he intends to stir through the Queen (Barbara Shelley), who is in secret communication with Rudolf Rassendyll, unknown to her stiff and arrogant spouse, the King (George Baker). The opener scampered along nicely to a climax of the Queen's messenger, bearing an incriminating message to Rassendyll, on the brink of discovery by Rupert's men.

The acting was forthright, the sets adequate, and Gerald Blake directed Campbell Logan's production like he was on piece-work.

ducers in a higher ratio than ever before, that is all right with me.

"I am not even pleading for an upgrading of the financial base of the creative world. The main thing, it seems to me, is that they will be given a chance to be seen and heard, a chance to fit somewhere in this new pipeline. The main thing is that America be able to share not just a fragment of the creative process in a locked-in numbers game, but that America be able to share as much more of the creative process as it is willing to pay for."

He sees pay-tv as the potential outlet for the artistic "loners" who bravely make films like "David and Lisa." He sees it also making possible the $150,000 documentary that's three months in production, instead of the $7,000 quickie that free tv is tied to. Above all he sees it (admittedly dreaming) as a haven for new ideas and experimentation, mobilizing and maximizing "the full creative forces that are alive and throbbing and fermenting in this country."

For all his disclaimers about the part Field Enterprises might play in what he called "the great renaissance" that pay-tv would touch off, there were strong suggestions that Marshall Field Jr. and his board had been giving the pay medium in its various forms more than a little thought.

Said Quinlan: "My associates at Field Enterprises and I have a lengthy period of study and investigation ahead of us before we can make any decisions of that magnitude." And then he added that the company "is always committed to the daring and the venturesome" and that it is in an "ideal position" to take a major step in the pay-tv industry if that should finally be indicated by a thorough, unhurried study.

Mpls. TV Stations Fight FCC Fines

Minneapolis, April 28.

U.S. Justice Department has filed suit in federal district court here against all four Twin Cities' television stations to collect $500 fines from each of them. The fines had been assessed by the FCC which found them guilty of violating one of its regulations.

Regulation in question requires broadcasting stations to inform dialers when programs are advertisements. In this instance, the four failed to identify the Minneapolis Downtown Council, a businessmen's body, as being the sponsor of two one-minute programs employing Dr. Arthur Upgren, a Twin Cities' college economics professor, to urge public support for a proposed Sunday stores closing measure. The proposed legislation was aimed primarily at suburban discount stores doing business on the Sabbath.

Contending that the lack of sponsor identification was not "willful" and, thus, did not violate any FCC regulation, the stations have refused to pay the fines and will fight the matter out in the courts. Their main argument is that the Downtown Council, together with Dr. Upgren, prepared the taped programs and the Council presumably had been identified as the sponsor.

Grand Rapids TV Grant To West Michigan Co. Upsets Examiner Rule

Washington, April 28.

FCC decided to give channel 13 in Grand Rapids, Mich. to West Michigan Telecasters Inc.

Unanimously granting West Michigan the spot for a new tv station, Commission turned aside competing bids of Grand Broadcasting Co., MKO Broadcasting Corp. and Peninsular Broadcasting Co.

Commission based its decision on points scored by West Michigan in area familiarity and planning for program proposals.

The decision overturns a Hearing Examiner's recommendation of last May for the channel to be awarded to Grand Broadcasting.

Grand Rapids Inc. repping all four applicants, has been operating WZZM-TV on the channel since late 1962.

The Hearing Examiner suggested Grand Broadcasting because of its broadcast experience and integration of ownership with management. Agreeing the company stood out in these criteria, FCC averred those factors weren't that decisive.

Commissioner Kenneth Cox did not participate in the decision and Commissioner Robert E. Lee was absent.

Backing West Michigan were Chairman E. William Henry and Commissioners Rosel Hyde, Robert Bartley, Frederick Ford and Lee Loevinger.

Eight CBS Foundation News Fellows for '64-'65 have been selected. The winners are:

Robert P. Blum, staff writer, WCBS Radio News, N.Y.; Norman B. Fein, civic affairs reporter, WTAR Radio-TV Corp., Norfolk, Va.; William F. Hoyt Jr., newsman, KOIN-TV, Portland, Ore.; J. Kenley Jones, news reporter, writer, photographer, KRNT and KRNT-TV, Des Moines; James D. Pratt, director of news and pubaffairs, KFDA-TV, Amarillo, Tex.; Richard Severo, newswriter, CBS News, N.Y.; John Thawley, assistant news editor, KTBC-TV, Austin, Tex.; and Richard D. Threlkeld, regional news editor, WMT-TV, Cedar Rapids.

The Fellowships were established by the CBS Foundation in '57 to offer a year of study at Columbia U., N.Y., for men and women in radio and tv news and pubaffairs.

Winners of NBC's sixth annual promotion managers contest had a week of la dolce vita in two cities before returning to the local grind this week.

In Los Angeles, the boys partied with Bob Hope and breakfasted with Jack Benny between visits to studios to meet stars and producers of the network's series.

On Thursday (23), the drummers flew to Las Vegas for a stay at the Desert Inn and visits to the Phil Harris show and Lido de Paris midnight show at the Stardust. Daytime hours Friday (24) were devoted to swimming, shopping, touring Vegas, etc.

The winners, hosted by NBC veepee Al Rylander and John Scuoppo, director of promotion, New York, were James Knight of WTRF, Wheeling; Howard Wry of WHNB, West Hartford; Dick Paul of WAVY, Norfolk; Caley Augustine, WIIC, Pittsburgh; Cal Mahlock, WKJG, Fort Wayne; and Barbara Welcher, KGNC, Amarillo.

In Las Vegas, the tv stations pass the feature films along the way the city's crap shooters pass the dice.

Hollywood Television Service reports it first sold its package of 140 post '50 Republic Pictures (called "Constellation Features") to Las Vegas station KORK-TV. Package was picked up for rerun by KLAS-TV in the same city.

Now a third sale has been made to KSHO-TV, same town.

Gordon Webber, Benton & Bowles veepee, and Richard L. Gelb, president of Clairol, will be the two Yank jurists at the 11th annual International Advertising Film Festival at Venice in June.

Gelb will serve on the panel judging telefilm ads, and Webber on the one screening theatrical film commercials.

NAB will hold two sales management seminars for broadcast sales execs at Stanford and Harvard Universities.

Meets, in cooperation with the Radio Advertising Bureau and Television Bureau will be Aug. 16-22 at Stanford and Aug. 23-29 at Harvard.

Seminars are limited to 40 applicants each with the tab at $300 per person.

A couple of indie station toppers have been tapped by Mayor Wagner to co-chair a broadcast trade committee helping to shape New York's tercentenary.

The pair are John E. McArdle, g.m. of Metromedia's WNEW-TV, and Mark Olds, g.m. of WINS, the Group W outlet. First step is formation of a committee to rep all facets of the city's broadcast industry.

Hanna-Barbera's "Magilla Gorilla" cartoon, bankrolled in 151 domestic markets by Ideal Toy, has fetched the annual award bestowed by the Volunteers of America. It's given to the kidshow "in the best tradition of wholesome American humor."

Award ceremony, wherein Ideal prez Lionel Weintraub accepted the citation from Gen. John F. McMahon of the Volunteers, was filmed and integrated with the "Magilla" seg which aired last week.

NAB is getting some help from Kiwanis International in puffing National Radio Month.

The Kiwanis folk have published a kit for members extolling the medium and urging them to tell their friends and neighbors of radio's role.

NBC-TV's new daytime game show, "Jeopardy," has set in new record for viewer response with some 250 letters a day coming in, says the network. The Merv Griffin entry also took a jump in favor with the daytime Nielsen lookers, hitting a top-of-the-slot 38% share for the week of April 13-17.

The George Heller Memorial Foundation (named for one of the AFTRA founders) is paging "everyone in the entertainment industry" to a fundraising cocktailery Sunday (3) at The Lambs, N.Y., 5-8:30 p.m., to benefit the Foundation's scholarship kitty. A buck admission includes first drink and hors d'oeuvres.

SET HEARING DATE ON MIAMI CH. 10

Washington, April 28.

FCC set June 5 for oral arguments in the Miami channel 10 scramble.

Up for hearing are applications of L.B. Wilson Inc. for renewal of WLBW-TV and competing bids of Civic Television Inc., South Florida Television Corp. and Miami Television Corp.

Setting the hearing date, FCC knocked down a joint petition by Wilson, Civic and Miami to reopen the record for inclusion of new evidence about South Florida's financial and character qualifications.

Also nixed was a petition of Sunbeam Television Corp., licensee of WCKT-TV on Miami's channel 7, to participate. Sunbeam's station is up for renewal and facing a comparative hearing and the company suggested the channel 10 and channel 7 arguments be heard together. This was similarly scotched.

Commissioner Lee Loevinger dissented on the turndown of Sunbeam's petition.

WWOK's 400G Sale

Charlotte, April 28.

Radio Station WWOK here has been sold for an estimated $400,000. Sale is subject to approval by FCC.

Pasadena's KRLA On Interim Status

Washington, April 28.

FCC indicated it wants to put the contentious channel of KRLA-AM, Pasadena, Calif., on an interim operation until it finally decides which of the 20 applicants should get the spot permanently.

This approach was suggested by the Commission when it gave Eleven Ten Broadcasting Corp. an extra month to operate the revoked station. Originally scheduled to sign off May 1 the station will have until June 1 to broadcast.

Five companies with interim bids in at FCC are Goodson-Todman Broadcasting Inc.; Oak Knoll Broadcasting Corp.; California Regional Broadcasting Corp.; Crown City Broadcasting Co. and Radio Eleven Ten Inc.

Fifteen other companies, with big show biz and broadcasting names on their corporate rosters, have applications in for regular operation on KRLA's spot.

Denver—Lee Harris, who joined the air staff of KBTR here a year ago, has been named to the newly-created post of pubaffairs director for Mullins Broadcasting Co. (KBTV-KBTR).

British Teenagers' Disk Buying Habit May Create Broader Market Tastes

London, April 28.

Outstanding difference between the American and the British disk markets, according to a wax executive with experience on both sides, is the amount of influence the kids have over album sales.

While in America a broad cross-section of the public will pick up an album, thus providing consumers for a diverse selection of talents, the majority of British LPs are bought by the same customers who buy the singles—the teenagers.

Result is that in the US top album sales can be achieved by "quality" singers, original casts, film soundtrack, orchestras, jazz, comedians and other non-rock performers. On the other hand in Britain, the album bestselling lists reflect closely the rock dominated singles charts.

The situation strongly indicates that British teenagers are dominant in album as well as single record buying and local a&r execs have a fight on their hands to get non-teen material off into any healthy sales stride.

For instance, it took the "South Pacific" soundtrack five years to rack up 1,000,000 album sales here, but it has taken something under four months for the Beatles' second LP, "With The Beatles," to pass the 900,000 sold mark (disk is selling so strongly locally, it is expected to hit the 1,000,000 sales mark in six months).

Moreover, EMI was once proud of the pacesetting performance of its "Black And White Minstrel Show" album which shot to 100,000 orders within three months of release. Now, Decca's Rolling Stone's first album has racked up 100,000 sales on the first day of issue.

Domination of disk buying by teenagers in this country has been keenly observed by American Tony D'Amato, London Records' recording manager, permanently based in the U.K. with the task of producing stereo albums for the Yank market.

D'Amato views the teens' disk buying influence with mixed feelings for, while their fascination for "amateur groups" is whipping up the biz into an important, multi-million dollar branch of the entertainment industry, their capture of both album and singles markets is serving to frustrate a host of professional talent which now can get neither live dates nor disk work.

But one point, D'Amato makes is that, as never before, British youngsters have got into the record-buying habit, which their forebears had only to a small degree. He believes that in the not too distant future the tastes of the current rock-mad record buyer will mature into a desire for a more disciplined music—say, for instance, swing—which will create a new market.

While fresh youngsters will perpetuate the beat and provide the bulk of the singles sales trade, D'Amato opines that the disk-buying habit will not die in the maturing British teenagers, but will undergo subtle changes, in several directions, sufficient to create a wider and more diverse public for albums.

Bellson Blasts Chi AFM's High Scales

Hollywood, April 28.

So the big band jazz era is dead. We know it. The squares killed it. So did the folkniks and the r&rers who appeal to the voice-addicts. But when an American Federation of Musicians local (also known as "the musicians' protective association") insists on kicking the corpse, that's something else.

And, according to drummer-batoneer Louis Bellson, that's what happened in Chi's near-north side Celebrity Lounge, where he helmed a 15-piece orch through most of March. Chi's Local 10, said Bellson, not only forced an abrupt ending to the month's stint but also caused the nitery to go dark.

Sequence of events are as follows: Celebrity Club opened in the Maryland Hotel just prior to Christmas last year. Owner Hank Markbright's idea was to bring big bands back to Chi and the midwest. Ralph Marterie's crew opened club.

With nitery's prices kept down (no cover, no minimum, drinks $1.25), biz boomed. When Si Zentner orch followed in January, tune union raised sideman scale to $165 per week per man. Biz still perked. Kai Winding orch succeeded, and scale was upped even more.

Finally, when Bellson took over Feb. 24, union raised sideman scale to $203.28. Two days of rehearsals cost Bellson "close to $500"—scale being $5.50 per hour per man. Word of mouth made club increasingly popular but, natch, owner Markbright couldn't meet the nut.

He went to union and asked what could be done about adjusting the five-day week rule for Chi tooters. Local 10 said they could play seven days if an extra 15-piece orch was used two days a week. Don Jeris orch was brought in, and twice weekly club had 30 men on the bandstand. Club shuttered three weeks ago, and, according to Bellson, there's "little hope of it opening again."

"I don't understand that union," moans Bellson. "I put 14 of their guys to work. Don't they realize it's better to have 14 guys working for $125 than none for $203?"

Bellson, who claims he wound Chi stint working for nothing (weekly payroll being over $3,000 plus rehearsal fees), opened at Shelly's Manne Hole Thursday (23) for 10 days. It marks club's first booking of a big band.

Fennell Exiting as Mpls. Symph Assoc. Conductor

Minneapolis, April 28.

When his two-year contract expires next August, Frederick Fennell will quit his Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra associate conductor post. J. H. Myers, the orchestra association's president, said Fennell is resigning to engage in "a future activity in the Twin Cities that will be announced in the near future."

Fennell came to Minneapolis from Rochester, N.Y., where he had been conductor of the Eastman Symphony Orchestra.

'Singing Idols' Still Score in France

Paris, April 28.

The so-called "singing idols," the rockers, Twisters et al. who are favorites of the more monied youth, are still felt to be fairly stable on the music scene, according to trade sources. These singers, of course, are topdisk sellers and in-person draws.

Consensus is that their platters still go briskly, they pull at vaudeers, get plenty of radio and tv time and have been appearing in more films with the summer tourist season coming up, it is felt they will draw as heavily as ever.

Rocker Johnny Hallyday, preparing for his 18-month army stint, is still rated top man, with Richard Anthony a close second. Hallyday's fiancee, rock and ballad artist Sylvie Vartan, on her way up. Francoise Hardy, who

Chi Symph Tooters Win Adjustment in Benefits

Chicago, April 28.

The Chicago Symphony Orchestra and its employers, the Orchestral Assn., last week took another step in ironing out the kinks in a contract forged under the pressure of a near-cancellation of the '62-'63 season.

Mayor Richard J. Daley, who appointed a fact-finding committee, said the Assn. has agreed to pay 75% and the individual players 25% of the cost of hospital, major surgical needs and life insurance. The agreement is retroactive to October, 1962, amounting to a refund of $15,000 to $20,000, or $150 to $190 per man.

Bandleaders Sue Seeking Recovery Of AFM Tax Coin

Group of dissident bandleaders, which has long been contesting the American Federation of Musicians' 10% traveling tax, filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court last week to recover all the monies they've paid under the impost since 1958.

Named defendants are the AFM, its prexy, Norman Kenin; treasurer George Clancy and secretary Stanley Ballard. Plaintiffs include Stan Kenton and 15 other batoners as well as Ben Cutler as head of the National Assn. of Orchestra Leaders.

Suit asks a declaratory judgment which would compel the AFM to return monies "unlawfully exacted" over a six-year period starting in 1958. Batoners also want an accounting, trèble damages and a trust imposed upon such coin collected.

The 10% traveling surcharge, according to the complaint, has been exacted since 1947 until the end of 1963. Moreover, it's claimed, this source of revenue provided 67% of AFM's income in the 1958-1963 period.

Action charges that the AFM had no right to this coin which was "withheld from its true owners." Complaint further alleges that the union was "unlawfully and unjustly enriched at the plaintiffs' expense."

The bandleaders, who say they paid because of AFM "coercion," contend the tax was "erroneous, false and illegal." Kenin, Clancy and Ballard, it's alleged, violated their fiduciary duties through their conduct in refusing an accounting, among other things.

AFM Asks 10% H'wood Wage Hike

Hollywood, April 28.

American Federation of Musicians is asking a flat 10% wage hike and additional scoring hours, in demands served on the three networks and vidpix production companies. Musicians met with the producers yesterday (Monday) in their initial negotiation session.

It's anticipated there will be stiff management resistance to the proposal for additional scoring hours, at least under the terms sought by the AFM. Under the current contract, sidemen work a minimum of 18 hours on each block of 13 half-hour shows. But under the new proposals, the musicians want to elevate this to 24 hours.

Demands call for proportionate increases on longer shows, seeking to raise the scoring hours for hour-long programs from the present 36 hours to 48 hours. Musicians also seek to limit pact so that sidemen will record only one show at each session.

Britain's Piano Sales Up

London, April 28.

For the first time since World War II, piano sales in Britain last year exceeded $2,800,000, a hike of 5%, and exports, at $2,800,000 rose by the same amount, according to the Pianoforte Publicity Assn. A further improvement is anticipated this year.

Anglo-U.S. Tooter Reciprocity Grows

London, April 28.

With the projected departure to the U.S. of a band of British pop groups and other music units, the musician union-enforced reciprocity deals—under which Yank and British tooters must be exchanged on a one-for-one basis, seem to augur well for American jazzmen, as America is importing British rockers, Britain is importing American jazz names.

Already here this year have been the big Duke Ellington Orchestra, Ella Fitzgerald with Roy Eldridge and Oscar Peterson. And currently the Modern Jazz Quartet and guitarist Lorendo Almedo are appearing in concerts and on tv-radio dates. So is American jazz trumpeter Red Allen.

Among those skedded for upcoming concert tours are the Woody Herman outfit in July and Errol Garner in October. Blues shouter Memphis Slim is expected next month for dates. Agent Vic Lewis' has pacted the Cannonball Adderley Sextet which will fly in to replace Pee Wee Russell whose projected trip to Britain was cancelled. Dave Brubeck will also play the U.K., making concert and tv appearances.

Under the British Musicians Union and the American Federation of Musicians' exchange pact, the Ella Fitzgerald-Jazz At The Philharmonic unit was in exchange for Britain's Original Downtown Syncopators. The MJQ swapped with the British Ray Ellington quartet. Brubeck comes in exchange for the Terry Lightfoot band, which has also figured with the Dave Clark Five in the Ray Charles orchestra exchange.

Gerry Marsden & The Pacemakers are involved in the exchange for Cannonball Adderley.

Red Nichols' Booking In Pasadena Inn Marks Its 1st Name Band in 25 Yrs.

Pasadena, Calif., April 28.

Sheraton-Huntington, this town's poshest hotel, has booked Red Nichols and crew June 13-Oct. 7, first name orch spot has inked in 25 years. Last name batoneer was Jan Garber.

Nichols closes current five-month run in L.A.'s Sheraton-West May 9. A two-week hiatus during Pasadena roost has been arranged so that Nichols' crew can join flock of other names on tour of Japan July 7-17, during which numerous jazz fests will be played in Nipponese keys.

Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. has set up the Far East caper. Talent includes Ella Fitzgerald, Louis Bellson's 15-man band, Dukes of Dixieland, "Tommy Dorsey orch" led by Sam Donahue (with Frank Sinatra Jr. and Pied Pipers) and Dizzy Gillespie combo. Bellson outfit is late replacement for Gene Krupa's crew. Krupa has been ill.

Meanwhile, Nichols returns to Marineland, near San Pedro, for annual six weeks, on Oct. 13. He also is firm for next winter at Sheraton-West.

Washington, April 28.

Prospects are fading for repeal of the jukebox copyright exemption.

The legislation which cleared the House Judiciary Committee late last summer is mired in the House Rules Committee and it looks like that is where it will remain.

The bill's backers say they have the votes in the House to pass the bill even though the jukebox industry and tavern owners have amassed considerable pressure against it.

But before any bill gets to the House floor it must be approved by Rules Committee which acts as a legislative traffic cop.

Rules Committee Chairman Howard Smith (D.-Va.) opposes the bill, however, and he is taking his time in acting on it.

Time is on Judge Smith's side as he quietly puts aside the requests or House Judiciary Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) for a hearing or action on the bill.

Even if Celler, the bill's sponsor, could pry the measure from the Committee and get it through the House, it is highly unlikely that the Senate would act on it before Congress adjourns in July just prior to the Republican National Convention.

The Senate will be lucky if it can snuff out a Southern filibuster and pass the civil rights bill by July, much less any comparative'y minor legislation.

If the repeal bill does not pass in this session, the entire legislative machinery will have to be re-geared when Congress comes back for a new session in January.

This means the whole process of hearings, committee action and the rest will have to be repeated giving the bill's numerous opponents still more chances to shoot it down."

Satchmo's 'Dolly' Topples Beatles

The Beatles, who have been dominating the U.S. disk best-seller charts, have receded in the compilations due to the strong surge of sales of the Kapp waxing of "Hello, Dolly" by Louis Armstrong. Satchmo's version of the title tune from the Broadway musical went into first place this week, dropping the Britons' platters into subsequent positions.

As a result of the single, Armstrong's new album, also called "Hello, Dolly," went into general release last week with an advance sale of 150,000.

The Armstrong "Dolly" single marks the reversal of another trend. It's the first time in many years that a legit musical excerpt has gone into No. 1 position in the charts.

Armstrong presently has no recording contract and when his agent, Joe Glaser, head of Associated Booking Corp., solicited several diskeries to etch the "Dolly" single, he was turned down because none wanted to do singles at that point. Kapp, however, decided to do the disk.

As a result of the sales record of "Dolly," Armstrong did six Edwin H. Morris tunes in the "Dolly" album. Jack Lee, Morris professional manager, had urged Glaser to get Armstrong to do the "Dolly" single.

REELECT STAN ADAMS PRESIDENT OF ASCAP

The ASCAP board of directors reelected songwriter Stanley Adams president of the performing right society. Adams has been a member of the Society's board since 1944.

Other officers elected were vice-presidents: Adolph Vogel, president of Elkan-Vogel Co. Inc., and writer-member Ned Washington; treasurer, Frank H. Connor, president of Carl Fischer Inc.; secretary, Paul Cresto; assistant secretary, Morton Gould.

Satchmo's 'Dolly,' Vaughn's 'Forever,' 'Lilies' Track, Nino & April's 'Songs,' Martin's 'Live at Carnegie' New LPs

LOUIS ARMSTRONG: "HELLO, DOLLY" (Kapp). Louis Armstrong is one of those show biz vets who just can't stop putting out. He scored strongly this year with his waxing of "Hello, Dolly" and now follows that up with a fine LP in a similar groove, containing several other legit showtunes. Singing and tooting his horn, backed by some fine traditional wailers, he breezes through such numbers as "A Lot of Livin' To Do," "A Kiss To Build a Dream On," "Moon River," "You Are Woman, I Am Man" and more. This could be one of his strongest-selling albums.

BILLY VAUGHN: "FOREVER" (Dot). With the click musical item "Forever," Billy Vaughn has another solid instrumental slice. Also included is "Shangri-La," an additional hit, and other tunes briskly arranged by Vaughn, Milt Rogers and Bill Jones. A vocal chorus joins the instrumentalist for solid effect. The result is a fine musical package, in a soft and melodic groove. It's sure to grab spins and sales.

"LILIES OF THE FIELD" (Epic). No sooner than Sidney Poitier won the Oscar for his best performance in "Lilies of The Field," this enterprising label put out the soundtrack from that film. It's standout for the genre since the Jerry Goldsmith score contains several memorable themes interspersed among folk and spiritual melodies. Jester Hairston is showcased on a stirring gospel vocal in the "Amen" number, done twice in this score.

"NINO & APRIL SING THE GREAT SONGS" (Atco). Nino Tempo and April Stevens give some slick pip readings to a standard songbag with this LP. Jimmie Haskell has contributed spirited and groovy pop settings for the duo. Miss Stevens often steps to the mike for some listenable whispering bits and the twosome provides other vocal effects which work well. Included in the package are "Tea For Two," "Honeysuckle Rose" and "Stardust," among other tunes. It's a solid-sounding array, due for programming and sales action.

TONY MARTIN: "LIVE AT CARNEGIE HALL" (20th-Fox). Backed by a full orch, this latest LP by Tony Martin was waxed at a Carnegie Hall, N. Y., concert and offers a nice display of vocalizing by the singer. Mixing a solid blend of ballads and uptempo numbers, he delivers in his w.k. full-throated style with gusto and feeling. In his songalog are "Lullaby of Broadway," "Fly Me To the Moon," "La Vie En Rose," "Avalon" and others. These build nifty excitement when mixed with audience reactions.

GALE GARNETT: "MY KIND OF FOLK SONGS" (RCA Victor). This set serves as the disk introduction for Gale Garnett, a folk singer with strong pop overtones. The husky-voiced chiper herein essays a nice array of tunes, some of which are familiar and a couple of others which she wrote herself. She has an effective if undistinctive style which expresses itself oke on such as "Take This Hammer," "Wanderin'," her own "Prism Song" and "Fly Bird." Her dramatics sometimes get the better of her but overall she makes a solid impression.

BLOSSOM DEARIE: "MAY I COME IN" (Capitol). An intime songstress who developed a following via her nitery and Verve recordings, Blossom Dearie now turns up on the Capitol label with her distinctive song stylings. Miss Dearie is a warbler who uses her fragile pipes with subtle effects that are accentuated in the LP by fine jazz backing under Jack Marshall's baton. Top in the songalog are "Something Happens To Me," "When Sunny Gets Blue," "I Wish You Love," "Charade" and "Love Is A Necessary Evil," plus the title song.

CATERINA VALENTE: "I HAPPEN TO LIKE NEW YORK" (London). Singer Caterina Valente has been churning out the LPs lately and this is one of her better efforts. Dedicated to Gotham, it contains various songs penned about the Big City and she delivers with strength and spirit, especially on the title tune, "I happen To Like New York." The Johnny Keating Orch backs competently, providing simple yet dramatic settings. Tunes include "Lullaby of Broadway," "Autumn In New York," "Manhattan Serenade," "Broadway," "Take the A Train" and others.

JESSE COLIN YOUNG: "THE SOUL OF A CITY BOY" (Capitol). The folk music boom has attracted buffs in both urban and country areas and Jesse Colin Young is an example. A New York City boy, he wails country blues, work songs and bluegrass as though born to it. He has a fine, emotional style which presents the songs in an authentic-sounding manner. His guitar playing is likewise slickly handled with nifty country patterns. His songs include such as "Rye Whiskey," "Drifter's Blues," "Stranger Love" and others.

SERAFFYN: "OF LOVE, OF WAR, OF MANY THINGS" (Columbia). This is a flashy and dramatic session sung and spoken by Seraffyn, a performer in the tradition of the troubadours of old. Much of his repertoire is made up of old English items but there's a side trip to the legit "Try to Remember" and the western fave "The Cowboy's Lament." The singer has a strongly dramatic style for this specialized array. Although he sometimes overdoes, in the main he is an effective tune purveyor for those who happen to dig his specialties.

"IRVING FIELDS PLAYS THE WORLD'S FAVORITE MELODIES" (Ford). Pianist Irving Fields gives a hefty longhair reading to a set of big musical items with this disk which includes such pieces as "Blue Danube," "La Cinquantaine," "Dark Eyes," "Liebestraum," "Tales From the Vienna Woods" and others. His longhair delivery is mixed with an occasional bit of pop tinkling but much is in the dramatic, more traditional vein. It's an oke piano display, with backing by a trio which sometimes intrudes rhythmically but rounds out the program.

JOHNNY DANKWORTH ORCH: "WHAT THE DICKENS" (Fontana). This is an unusual instrumental set in which the British maestro has composed a score as audio illustrations of some characters and scenes from the novels of Charles Dickens. Dankworth's big orch runs through these modern, and, on the whole, un-Dickensian jazz conceptions with a sharply swinging attack that gives the LP considerable stature apart from its literary associations. Numbers in the set are under such titles as "Little Nell," "Dotheboy's Hall," "Ghosts," "Dodson & Fogg," "The Pickwick Club" and "Sergeant Buzfuz."

RECOGNIZE DISKS AS ART, RIAA ASKS D.C.

Record Industry Assn. of America is pitching for Congressional recognition of the phonograph record as one of the "major art forms." In the House bill to establish the National Council on Arts, phonographs were omitted from among the media covered, including films, radio and tv, all of which were tabbed as "art forms."

RIAA exec secretary Henry Brief testified before the House committee on education and labor last week, urging that the proposed bill be amended to include phonograph records, since, as he pointed out, better than 80% of the program material carried on AM and FM radio consists of disks.

Tin Pan Valley

By RED O'DONNELL

Nashville, April 28.

Columbia a&r country music chief Don Law in Louisville tomorrow (Wed.) to produce album of live performance of Derby Week country music festival sponsored annually by Philip Morris. Artists slated to perform include Johnny Cash, Carl Smith, Lefty Frizzell, Carl & Pearl Butler, Stonewall Jackson, Billy Walker, Pee Wee King's band and Ben Smathers' Cloggers.

At Ryman Auditorium here May 8 Law plans a different type LP. He'll cut a disk featuring Ben Smathers' Cloggers (longtime "Grand Ole Opry" fave) backed by Buddy Durham's band from Wheeling, West Va. "I believe," opines Law, "this is the first time for a square dance album."

Some 12 to 14 songs for MGM's biopic of late Hank Williams, titled "Your Cheatin' Heart," which George Hamilton will lip-synch, have been cut at RCA Victor's Nashville studio. Fred Karger and Frank Milton from Hollywood and Jim Vienneau from New York joined Audrey (Mrs. Hank) Williams and Wesley Rose on the production line.

In addition to Hamilton, Susan Oliver as Audrey Williams, Arthur O'Connell as late Fred Rose (Hank's acknowledged discoverer) and Red Buttons as leader of The Drifters (Williams band), have been cast in film which is now shooting on location in California with Gene Nelson directing.

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

CONNIE FRANCIS . . . . . BE ANYTHING
(MGM) . . . . . Tommy

Connie Francis' "Be Anything" (Shapiro-Bernstein) gives this ballad a neat workover with a steady beat that will earn it a wide round of spins with the juke set. "Tommy" (Mernat) is an okay rocking number in a conventional teenage format.*

BARBARA LEWIS
SOMEDAY WE'RE GONNA LOVE AGAIN
(Atlantic) . . . . . Spend A Little Time

Barbara Lewis' "Someday We're Gonna Love Again" (McLaughlint) registers as a swinging slice with a catchy lyric idea that this songstress projects for maximum results with her blues-flavored attack. "Spend A Little Time" (Jobetet) changes pace with a pretty ballad idea that could pick up the action.

GENE PITNEY . . . . . YESTERDAY'S HERO
(Musicor) . . . . . Cornflower Blue

Gene Pitney's "Yesterday's Hero" (Sea-Lark Enterprisest) hits as an original ballad idea which gains extra impact via a striking performance. "Cornflower Blue" (Arch) is an okay gently rocking side.*

MIKE CLIFFORD . . . . . IT HAD BETTER BE TONIGHT
(United Artists) . . . . . All The Colors of the Rainbow

Mike Clifford's "It Had Better Be Tonight" (Northridge-United Artists) from "The Pink Panther" score, is a nifty Italo-flavored ballad with a toe-tapping beat and a sharp lyric nicely delivered by this singer. "All The Colors of the Rainbow" (Januaryt) is a pleasing straight ballad entry.*

ANITA BRYANT . . . . . THE WORLD OF LONELY PEOPLE
(Columbia) . . . . . It's Better To Cry Today

Anita Bryant's "The World of Lonely People" (Ross Jongnickel) shapes up as a slick rocking ballad with a good lyric which this songstress delivers effectively to put her back into contention. "It's Better To Cry Today Than To Cry Tomorrow" (April) is an okay rocking ballad.*

BROOK BENTON . . . . . TOO LATE TO TURN BACK NOW
(Mercury) . . . . . Another Cup of Coffee

Brook Benton's "Too Late To Turn Back From Now" (Playt) registers as a neat ballad with a country flavor which this savvy performer handles for broad commercial impact. "Another Cup of Coffee" (Peter Maurice) is a well-written piece of material also due to grab spins.*

PEGGY MARCH . . . . . TAKIN' THE LONG WAY HOME
(RCA Victor) . . . . . Leave Me Alone

Peggy March's "Takin' The Long Way Home" (Metrict) is a bouncy ballad with an old fashioned flavor which blends nicely with this songstress' contemporary vocal style. "Leave Me Alone" (Metrict) is a good jive-slanted ballad.

FRANK IFIELD . . . . . SWEET LORRAINE
(Capitol) . . . . You Came A Long Way From St. Louis

Frank Ifield's "Sweet Lorraine" (Mills) shapes up as a socko updated version of this oldie by a British singer with a set of unusual pipes slated for wide response in the U.S. pop market. "You Came A Long Way From St. Louis" (Jewel*) is another excellent performance of a fine standard.*

AMES BROS . . . . . LOVE IS AN OCEAN OF DEVOTION
(Epic) . . . . . Love Me With All Your Heart

Ames Bros.' "Love Is An Ocean of Devotion" (Bennie Benjamin) is a standout ballad which gives this combo their best chance in some time to return to the bestseller lists. "Love Me With All Your Heart" (Peer Internationalt) is a Latin ballad also handled with strong impact.*

DAVE CLARK FIVE . . . . . DO YOU LOVE ME
(Epic) . . . . . Chaquita

Dave Clark Five's "Do You Love Me" (Jobetet) spotlights this British combo on one of those frantic rocking slices with which they have been clicking in the current cycle of the Liverpool sound. "Chaquita" (Al Gallicot) is another commercial entry featuring the group's driving instrumental style.

JERRY KELLER . . . . . SMALL WONDER
(Coral) . . . . . The Tears Keep Falling Down

Jerry Keller's "Small Wonder" (Chappell) is a fine class ballad which gives this singer an excellent showcase for his smooth crooning style. This could be very big for jockeys wanting a smart change of pace. "The Tears Keep Falling Down" (Northern*) reverts to a more conventional rocking groove.*

CHOLEE HARRIS . . . . . LITTLE PEOPLE
(Hickory) . . . . . Mama, I'll Be Good

Cholee Harris' "Little People" (Fred Roset) shapes up as a solid rocking ballad with a juve-slanted lyric which this songstress handles well. "Mama, I'll Be Good" (Fred Roset) is an arresting idea with good chances.

THE PIROUETTES . . . . . THE WRANGLER STRETCH
(Diamond) . . . . . If You See My Baby

The Pirouettes' "The Wrangler Stretch" (Rittenhouset) is a promising attempt to launch a new teenage dance. It's a straight rocking beat which this combo handles stylishly. "If You See My Baby" (Rittenhouset) is a good straightforward rocking entry also belted very effectively.

MIGIL 5 . . . . . MOCKIN' BIRD HILL
(Cameo) . . . . . Long Ago and Far Away

Migil 5's "Mockin Bird Hill" (Southern) is a firstrate rocking adaptation of this standard by a combo that features a fine blues lead singer. "Long Ago and Far Away" (T. B. Harms*) is another oldie that turns up in a similar shuffling format.* — Herm.

Rita Pavone Nabs 3d Goldisk at RCA Fete; Other Via Veneto Music Notes

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome, April 28.

Rita Pavone received her third gold platter this week at RCA ceremonies which also helped launch and present three new Teddy Reno discoveries: Dino & the Kings, The Rokes, and La Cricca.

At the same time it was disclosed in Milan that Bobby Solo's San Remo also-ran and subsequent best-seller "Una Lacrima sul Viso", has now easily topped the 1,000,000 mark—a new record here for a single. Solo is currently in Naples acting in a film inspired by platter. Pic has the same title.

As predicted, Gigliola Cinquetti's win in Eurovision Song Contest helped her finally to make the top rating mark, which she had never attained despite her San Remo win with "Non ho l'Eta". Young singer has since been busy taping video commercials and making p.a.'s in Paris, London, and other European spots, all under the CGD aegis.

RCA has another gold disk occasion coming up: Edoardo Vianello's, at which youngster will give recital of recent compositions. Vianello's "O Mio Signore" looks an easy winner in RCA's write-in-tie-in winter popularity contest, according to incomplete returns.

Also from RCA: Michele, big seller here last year, to Paris for series of p.a.'s, radio and tv appearances, plus date at Olympia. Neil Sedaka has pressed two new songs in Italian: "La Notte e Fatta per Amare" and "La Forza del Destino". Anton Karas has been in Rome to accompany Rita Pavone with his zither on her teleshow, "Gianburrasca".

RCA's Pix Album

RCA's Rome plant also has just issued an effectively packaged LP called "From Hollywood to Cinecitta'", which includes some of top pix themes of past year or so, either in direct versions (if by RCA stars or orchs) or adaptations. It's a good standard for musical libraries as it covers key "must" tunes. Many of them (Rita Pavone's theme song from "Empty Canvas"; Trovajoli's Tamoure number from "I Mostri"; Miranda Martino's song from "Pink Panther"; Roby Ferrante's tune from "High Infidelity") are very striking and listenable.

Still in the film music orbit: C.A.M. had two tunes, but no winner, directly and indirectly competing in recent Oscar race; local diskery did original tracks for "Mondo Cane" ("More") and "Fellini 8-1/2", latter a winner as best foreign pic, however. Battle is on for who lands rights to new Federico Fellini film, with several companies trying to wrest lead away from C.A.M. though latter has advantage of indirect tie with Fellini producer Angelo Rizzoli.

C.A.M. also has three of its songs in Catherine Spaak recordings: "Penso a Te"; "Questi Vent'Anni Miei" from "I Malamondo", plus "Non e Niente". A film music specialist, C.A.M. recently issued platters for following pix "Liola'", "Omicron", "Fuorilegge del Matrimonio", "Gli Eroi del West", "Storie sulla Sabbia" and "Cuori Infranti".

Other film tunes: Nini Rosso's effective score for Italo version of French pic, "In Famiglia si Spara" (Sprint); Narciso Parigi's music for "Vie Conjugale" (Pathe). Sprint also has Lyda Ralli, a new recruit, doing "Una Notte Cosi'", theme song for pop RAI-TV show of past few months, "Studio One", as Miss Ralli's first platter for Rome recording outfit.

Mina's Ri-Fi Comeback

Mina's return to top positions is making Ri-Fi, her new recording company, beam. She follows up her recent toprater, "Citta Vuota", with "E L'Uomo per Me", another Yank song adapted into Italian, backed by "So Che Non e Cosi". Ri-Fi has another hot performer in Fred Bongusto, who sent off his most recent duo, "Va Buono" and "Mare non Cantare," over RAI-TV program called "Za Bum". Both could travel.

Philips follows the trend which says that a foreign singer must sing Italian to reach the majority of the public here. Two French singers, Johnny Hallyday and Claude Francois, have just pressed some Italianized Gallic tunes for label (which incidentally has just refurbished its ad campaign with new and effective layouts, art work, etc.)

Francois does "Dai Patata" and "Le Ragazze Vogliono L'Amor", while Hallyday goes with "La Mia Chitarra" and "La Vita Ricomincia". (RCA is also looking for sock tune to launch one of its French names, Silvie Vartan, recently in Rome).

Beatles a Fixture

Beatles' imprint on local scene under the Parlophon (Carish) banner is sealed by addition of "She Loves You" to previously strong sellers "Misery" and "Please, Please me". Carish is moving consistently with Peppino di Capri, always a consistent seller. Latest to move up is "Puccatura". Trini Lopez is strong and going up too with "America" and "Give me a Hammer".

Other recent releases here: Domenico Modugno with two characteristic new songs from his stage play, "Tommaso D'AMalfi"; "Tu si o Mare", and "Risveglio" (Fonit-Cetra)—good mood pieces but a bit short for ideal home and/or juke projection; they're neatly arranged, though. Fonit-Cetra also has a newcomer, Elio Cipri, off to an okay start with "Mafa . . . Mafalda" and "Vai Via da Me", delivered with nasal twang and in teen-appealing hectic fashion. Needs experience, though, if expected to climb.

Italdisc has three novelties: Lalla Leone, with good backdrop, singing "Non Farti Vedere"; other warm voice that needs work is Elio Cali's in "Baracca sul Mare". Contrast with pro delivery by Mina in both "A Volte" (Pretend that I'm Her) and "Non Piangero" (Just let me Cry) is strident, however, in one of star's last disks for Italdisc before her recent and controversial switch to Ri-Fi.

EMI's Hot Wax Pace Hikes Profit Margin $8.4 Mil

London, April 28.

The phenomenal disking pace of Electric & Musical Industries, one of Britain's Big Two waxworks, plus its other activities in the electrical appliance marketing and electronic manufacturing field, has brought about a $8,400,000 rise in the firm's pre-tax profit.

The company, which records The Beatles among other top British artists currently achieving high international sales, forecasts a higher dividend and is planning a one-for one scrip issue to holders of the $31,472,000 equity capital.

Increase in EMI biz reported earlier this year has been fully sustained and the directors expect that profit will not be less than $22,400,000, against $14,162,400 in the year ended June 30, 1963.

A final dividend of 10% is anticipated on the increase capital which would make a total equivalent to 12½% against 8¾% previously.

Britain's EMI, which owns 98% of Capitol Records in America, is 12% owned by private American investors.

ISRAELI POP SONG FESTIVAL COMPETISH

Tel Aviv, April 28.

Independence Day celebrations in Israel added one peer and three new choice songs to this country's field of entertainment. Meir Margalith, veteran stage comedian and star of classic and modern comedies which have enjoyed the longest runs on local stages during the last 38 years, received the Israel Prize, the State's highest acknowledgment of achievements for "his life contributions to the Israel theatre."

Margalith had recently completed a run of over 500 performances of Ephraim Kishon's "The Deed," starred in the local film, "Mishpahat Simchon," and is currently starred in Sholom Aleichem's "Amcha," produced and directed by the Canadian-American Peter Fryre Israeli resident during the last decade, who has given the Jewish play a Shakespearean touch.

Philharmonic, will conduct opening and July 16 programs with Austrian pianist Jorg Demus as soloist. Regular conducor Hideo Saito will conduct other programs with Brazilian pianist Joao Carlos Martins soloist on July 14 and 17, American recorder artist Bernard Krainis on July 15 and 18.

O'Seas Mkt. Key To Wax Income, Warns Bob Weiss

Hollywood, April 28.

Bob Weiss, prexy of Internatonal Holding Co., Ltd. warns that U.S. diskeries should watch the foreign market very closely if they don't want to go under. "It isn't like it used to be," said Weiss who has spent the better part of the past 12 years as on-the-spot rep for American diskeries, pubberies and tunesmiths overseas. "Six years ago, they were clamoring for our product. Today only a handful of our artists are clicking overseas."

He listed the clicks as Brenda Lee (Brunswick, Pat Boone (Dot), Nat Cole (Capitol), Elvis Presley —"though not like before" (Victor); Trini Lopez (Reprise); Jim Reeves (Victor); Julie London—"strictly in Japan and the Orient" (Liberty); Neil Sedaka (Victor); Gene Pitney (United Artists); Frank Sinatra — "England especially" (Reprise); Joannie Summers (Warner Bros.), Billie Vaughn (Dot), Henry Mancini (Victor); Roy Orbison (Monument); Peter, Paul & Mary — "in England, Australia and, with their new German recordings, in Germany (Warner Bros.) ". . . and maybe a few others, though I don't think I've missed many."

Since 1958, when Weiss joined Warner Bros. Records as international director (he quit to go it alone last December), the worldwide picture has become such that "within a very few years, foreign trade will account for 50% of the total gross business" of those U.S. waxeries which maintain close vigil and constant liaison with the overseas market.

Those that don't feel the international pulse, avers Weiss, will be turning out original hits which will "wind up as nothing more than demos for foreign artists." Change in the global market stems largely from the growth of nationalism and technological advances.

The former KFWB deejay (circa 1942), who later became Capitol's liaison man with foreign distribs, predicts the next big overseas boom will take place in the Orient —Japan, South Korea, Okinawa, the Philippines, Hong Kong (now a transshipping center), Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand and eventually Indonesia.

"Orientals," he added, "are music-loving people — particularly Filipinos, who are beginning to put out their own product." ("Manila, I Love Manila" by Vic Solidad, released by Mereco Records on the Villar label, is current South Pacific click). "The Philippines now have the finest music in the Orient," Weiss opines.

Aside from technological strides made, foreign nations have also cultivated their own crops of writers and singers, Weiss pointed out. With natural tendency being to push the native sons and daughters, foreign nations are less dependent on U.S. product than ever before.

In town to negotiate representation for "a few more labels" home-based in Hollywood, Weiss expects to wing to Paris in a few weeks.

Britain's $64 Question: Will Rocking Redcoats Consolidate U.S. Beachhead?

London, April 28.

Will British waxers be able to consolidate their foothold in American topselling disk charts, or will the rocking redcoats slip back out of sight? These and similar questions have now become uppermost in the minds of many British music industryites.

To key execs like a George Martin, a Norrie Paramor, a Dick Rowe, a Tony Hatch, an Alan Freeman, a Jack Braverstock and other a&r aristocracy attendant at the big U.K. diskeries, the answers to the queries are of paramount importance.

They know, fundamentally, that theirs is the largest share in the "responsibility" of keeping local artists in the international limelight. They know that company heads will turn to them for the answers. They know they will be in the forefront at the inquest if, for the second time in history, the British are forced to turn tail and flee.

At stake, of course, is the vast sales coin offered by the American market, a prize four or five times greater than is normally achieved in the U.K. This bonanza is one they previously only dreamed of or, at best, attained by a "lucky" accident.

But following the Beatles' phenomenal runaway in which they have grabbed off sales and airtime in an unprecedented fashion, and the resultant stimulation of interest in several other British popsters, the sales gold of the American market has been bought dramatically into reach.

At the same time, British a&r men—indies and otherwise—have conclusively proved that they can cut disks of universal appeal and of a calibre that ranks with the highest in the world. This plus factor alone goes a long way in favor of continued British representation in U.S. charts.

Also, the three British rock acts that have visited the U.S. following disclicks—The Beatles, The Searchers and the Dave Clark Five—have made sufficient impression to be asked for return dates (all have accepted).

As never before, too, British artists' followup disks are making it in the U.S. listings. For instance, second disks by the likes of Dusty Springfield and Dave Clark are moving up following their initial clocks. Fact augurs well for a measure of "stability" in the American market for British performers.

Helping, too, to establish U.K. talent more firmly Stateside, is the fact that several American companies are now recording artists over here especially for the Yank market. RCA Victor is doing it, for instance, and so is Lee Pincus of Ambassador Music.

Naturally, British a&r execs are now more keenly aware that from here on in disks must be of a universal appeal—and made with America very much in mind.

But all the skill the local a&r staffers bring to the U.K. recordings must now be balanced by the goodwill, promo ability and business acumen of American outlets that are handling them. Here, again, the last months have seen a new and vital interest on the part of American waxworks in promoting British imports.

The next six months should spell out whether or not their interest is going to wane.

Merc 'Beeps' Barry

Chicago, April 28.

Just like those razor blade commercials, Mercury is inserting a "beep" in "Barry's Boys," the Chad Mitchell Trio's satire on Senator Goldwater and his followers.

The "beep" has nothing to do with the disk's satirical jibes, but is to excise the word "damn" in order to get more air play.

Cap's One-Price Policy Still a Hot Topic in Disk Biz

Hollywood, April 28.

The war biz, like any other industry, is characterized by gradual trends wrought by evolutionary changes, motivated by perennially re-examining profit-getting policies. But there are exceptions to the rule of slow change, and Capitol Records' recent inauguration of its one-price-for-all policy is an exception. It has forced at least two other majors to the brink of adopting it and the rest are marking time.

"I don't blame the smaller record company for not adopting our policy just yet," said Cap prexy Alan Livingston. "If I were a small manufacturer, I'd sit tight, too, as long as we've stuck our necks out already. However, judging by the success we're enjoying, I think they're crazy if they don't adopt it eventually."

Asked whether Cap's nabbing of The Beatles had anything to do with the policy switch, Livingston snapped, "It so happens the one-price policy was planned before the Beatles."

While Liberty Records prexy Alvin S. Bennett is "entirely in favor of Capitol's changing the price structure," he qualifies by adding, "I don't agree with the $2.02 price-for-all plan, necessarily. I think there is room for the subdistributor and I do believe he's entitled to his discount. The subdistributor is an absolute must and there's no room for him in Capitol's present structure—as I understand it."

Meanwhile, back at Capitol: "We want the rack-jobber to stay in business," Livington emphasized, "but to serve the function he originally went into business to perform—namely, to supply the lesser outlets (merchants who do not carry records exclusively) with product. We were tired of the rack-jobber creaming our hits. Also, we didn't want him to replace the dealer, and that's just what was happening."

"Liberty has no immediate plans for alternating its price policy," Bennett concludes. "I am hopeful RCA will come up with something in the way of price stabilization in the near future. Columbia did so last August, so we're marking time."

The familiar no-comment sign was lit when a Victor Coast spokesman was approached.

Meanwhile, back at Liberty, that lacquery's national marketing director, Don Bohanan, discloses while Liberty now uses 27 indie distribs, it finds itself constantly confronted with marketing problems, the solution for which lies "only in the establishment of more factory-owned branches." Asked where these additional branches will sprout, Bohanan declined to comment.

Reprise Records veep, Mo Ostin, said his diskery will "mark time" re changing of price structure. Ditto, natch, for partner plattery, Warner Bros. Records, according to prexy Mike Maitland.

Philadelphia, April 28.

Chad Mitchell Trio drew a capacity house Friday (24) for promoter Bob Borden at the Academy of Music here.

Gross was $9,800.

JAZZ TO LIGHTEN CHI'S RAVINIA LONGHAIR FEST

Chicago, April 28.

The lighter side of the otherwise longhair Ravinia Festival on Chicago's North Shore this summer will be represented by jazz and folk artists, with Wednesday and Friday nights designated for the pop events.

Bob Dylan is set for June 17, Miriam Makeba for June 19 and Peter Nero July 15. The rest will do a pair of concerts: Louis Armstrong on June 24 and 26, New Christy Minstrels July 1 and 3, Ella Fitzgerald July 22 and 24, and Thelonious Monk July 29 and 31. They'll be sandwiched by performances of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Aching Back No Curb To Trumpet Playing, Ct. Rules

Tucson, April 28.

Testimony of a parttime trumpet player that tootling bothered his aching back was discounted last week by the Arizona Supreme Court. The high court agreed with the Arizona Industrial Commission that Frank Sanchez, of Prescott, continued to enjoy substantial earnings from his trumpet playing despite a mining injury to his back.

However, the court said the Sanchez is entitled to more workmen's compensation than the commission had allowed for the injury. Sanchez testified his musical income diminished drastically after his injury.

Fred Payne

one of the two top popular filling-stations.

Payne's Bar, however, because of its proximity to Pigalle and the Montmartre environs was more of a show biz haunt, particularly with the Bluebell Girls, the Tiller Girls and the English performers working in Paris revues. The late Harry McElhone's New York bar catered more to the newspaper bunch who clustered around the Hotel Scribe and, of course, because of its proximity to the grand boulevards was a favorite with the Yank tourists.

Both spots still have guest books of formidable size and probably priceless but Payne's "rogues gallery" of performers, British dominantly, then Americans, along with the local French, German, Scandinavian and other troupers, rates special attention. It probably has been the subject of considerable press comment before and rates a special spread because of the unique calibre of the al fresco juvenile poses of many show biz greats in their formative years.

Payne was a cockney and started his bar as a tearoom which attracted the British chorus girls (somehow French revues invariably imported dancing girls from London) who felt at home because they "could get a real cup of tea" along with other British specialties. Eventually it became a bar and a general haunt for the Montmartre night owls and a windup spot for the show people.

Payne, like McElhone, found their bars taken over by the Nazis during the Occupation but reopened immediately post-World War II.

Incidentally, despite the New York Bar billing, Harry McElhone was a Scotsman and his son, Andrew, who now owns and operates, was also born in the United Kingdom. McElhone Sr. predeceased Payne by four years. The future of Payne's bar is indeterminate at the moment.

Burton's 'Hamlet'

Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" which has sold approximately 30,000 albums since it was released last year. Like "Hamlet," it was a 4-record album.

Top selling spoken-word album, other than a play, again claims Lieberson, is Edward R. Murrow's "I Can Hear It Now" which sold over 1,000,000 biscuits but was a single-record album.

"Hamlet" will follow pattern of "Virginia Woolf" and sell for $15 monaural and $17 stereo. Lieberson arrived at these prices with the thought that the recorded play should cost the consumer no more than two good seats at a Broadway production.

Also hitting the market same time as "Hamlet" will be the Alec Guinness recording of "Dylan," a two-record album. Selling well are Columbia's "In White America," which was an off-Broadway production, and the Actor's Studio all-star recording of "Strange Interlude."

Scheduled for early May release will be "Homage to Shakespeare," with John Gielgud, Edith Evans and Margaret Leighton. Lieberson believes that continued success of recorded plays might well result in bidding for recording rights just as happens now with musicals.

Britain's 94c Cover Disk Mkt. Now Wide Open as EMI Spins Into Field

London, April 28.

The market for 94c cover disks —which duplicate six pop hits on one platter—is now wide open. Following Pye's pioneering of this form of marketing with its Top Six label, EMI (Electric & Musical Industries), a major British diskery, has moved into the field with its own Hot Six records on the Regal Zonophone label.

At a time when Pye's cover waxes, produced by indie disker Bill Wellings, are fast sellers at the 100,000 and above mark, EMI has pacted with indie groover Robert Stigood to produce six-song "singles" which will be in direct competition with Pye's new label.

Difference between the two issues is principally that the EMI is naming artists on its releases—initially The Leroys and The Innocents, both of whom record under their own names on a regular EMI label. EMI, moreover, will probably feature different pop hits than those sung by Pye's unnamed artists on the Top Six waxes.

While EMI has moved into this new market of waxtivity—although possibly on a less rhythmic basis than Pye's regular one-a-month schedule of releases—Decca, the second big diskery, is still stoutly abstaining.

But as one Decca exec pointed out: "If there is a significant change in the market, we will undoubtedly revise our policy." This is taken to mean, that if Pye's pioneering and EMI's follow-through add up to a whole new, money-spinning market for the non-royalty-paying "cover" disks, Decca too may move into the field.

Israeli Fest

Tel Aviv, on Independence Day, chose the most popular three of 10 new songs, performed each by two top-performers and premiered on that occasion. This annual affair, sponsored by the Prime Minister's office and Kol Israel Broadcasting Service.

Of the 10 (screened by a panel of judges including some of the country's foremost composers and writers from 400 entries), Moshe Dor and Yaacov Holander's "Say, Girl" won the first prize. "Matters of Nothing," by Haim Keynan and Shimon Cohen, came next, and the third ze was awarded to Uriel Ofek and Yona Fuchs for "In a Sleepy Path."

writes her own rolling and slow songs, is holding her own.

Claude Francois is believed to be consolidating his pull while Eddy Mitchell is tagged a fading flash-in-the-pan. British songstress Petula Clark seems even stronger this year while Sheila is felt slipping in pull and interest. Frank Alamo appears steady, and Hugues Auffray, a skiffler with mainly folk songs and r&b, is getting more followers.

Surfs (6), a surf group from Madagascar, are gaining and Dick Rivers is also showing promise. Belter Marianne Mille is considered "most likely newcomer to succeed." Except for the Surfs and Miss Clark, the others are all French in spite of their Americanized monickers. It looks like rock will go rolling on in music circles for some time.

Cliff Richard Rolls Cont'l Tour May 5 in Holland

Glasgow, April 28.

Cliff Richard, English pop singer, at the Odeon Theatre here on a one-night stand, is set for engagements in Holland, Belgium, Germany, Austria and France on an upcoming tour through Europe. He will also visit Scandinavia.

Tour starts May 5 at Scheveningen, Holland. Dates in Belgium include Liege, Brussels and Antwerp. In Germany the unit will play Frankfurt and Munich.

Granz Denies BG's Allegation That He Deserted Jazz in Hour of Need

Editor, VARIETY:

In a report datelined April 7, Tokyo, Benny Goodman said, among other things "that Norman Granz has always been called the patron saint of jazz yet when the business got a little rough he runs." Goodman said this in reference to my comment in VARIETY on the state of jazz and the fact that I had not presented a Jazz at The Philharmonic Concert in America since 1957. Well, let's look at the record.

Since 1957 I have presented in Europe, Australia and South America an average of five concert tours a year, making a total of over 300 concerts during this period. These tours have included four with Duke Ellington, three with Miles Davis, two with MJQ, three with Basie, and with such artists as Nat ("King") Cole, Quincey Jones, Kid Ory, Dizzy Gillespie, Cannonball Adderley, the annual ones with Ella Fitzgerald and Oscar Peterson and a great many others, among them Benny Goodman and his orchestra (a disaster artistically and financially).

I've laid out approximately $750,000 in musicians' salaries during this period and when you add to this, transportation and promotion costs of rent and publicity, the total is well over $1,000,000. This is hardly "running." My profit, apart from the Ella Fitzgerald and Oscar Peterson tours, averaged less than 15%, not much considering the risks. And added to this was over $250,000 per year for recordings made by jazz musicians on Verve Records from 1957 until I sold the company in 1960.

Why then, do I say jazz was never really big and in fact, why do I continue with it? Well, I love jazz and I feel I should subsidize it as best as I can, as I did, for example, on Verve: the sales of Ella and Shelley Berman paid for the Tatums, the Websters et al. And three weeks ago on Easter Sunday I presented Duke Ellington at no profit whatsoever, at Carnegie Hall because I felt he should be heard by America whenever possible.

When Benny cites the success of Miles, Monk, Coltrane, and so on, that is a measure of just how much he doesn't understand the problem. What about the hundreds of unemployed musicians that cannot find work? For instance, Max Roach, Ben Webster, Sonny Stitt, Dexter Gordon, Lockjaw Davis, are just a few of the good musicians that cannot find work commensurate with their abilities. No, you see, Benny's point of view about other jazz musicians is "I've made it, now let them get out and do it."

Inside Stuff—Music

Frisco Chronicle's jazz columnist Ralph J. Gleason (who is also a sometime VARIETY correspondent) in a recent column charged show biz with having "forgotten" Tommy Lyman who died March 12 in Chicago. He chided the wire services for "not having carried a line on him" and "VARIETY only got around to running a brief one last week." (This took some doing to ferret out even in Chi, where the Prohibition era sentimental songster died.—Ed.).

While Lyman has been identified chiefly with torch songs like "Melancholy Baby" which were lullabies to many a sentimental drunk during and post-Prohibition, it was little known that he wrote a pretty good pop standard, "Montmartre Rose," which E. B. Marks Music has renewed. Copyright dates back to 1925. Lyman also authored another novelty, "Some Ambitious Mama Is Hanging Round My Papa." Paradoxically, it was during the late 1920s that Lyman clicked bigger with "Montmartre Rose" while playing in Paris' Harry's New York Bar. For some reason, both the tourists and expatriates then living in the French capital, and also the bilingual Parisians, went for this lachrymose paean to a faded beauty from the Butte (environs of Pigalle).

Gleason quotes somebody that "dames threw thousand dollar francs at his feet for him to sing his songs." Even if it was 1,000-franc notes, that was 40 bucks in those days, and very unlikely, especially in a joint like Harry's New York Bar which American newspapermen stationed in Paris favored. As for owning "pieces" of joints in New York, Lyman had dubious "percentage" arrangements which may have given him a loose rooting interest in the spots' economic success but he was chiefly a throw-money (tips) saloon singer.

The John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts has received a first royalty payment of nearly $60,000 from RCA Victor on the sale of more than 200,000 copies sold on four LPs featuring the bands of the Army, Marine Corps, Navy and Air Force. The LPs were released last May and the royalties represent the sale during the first four months. The Center received an award from the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge last week for its cooperation in making the service band recordings possible.

The N.Y. University-NARAS course in Recording and Music, closed last week with a panel on electronic music in which Princeton music professor Milton Babbitt described the advances in electronic sounds. The panel, although citing the new and advanced sounds made possible by electronic reproduction, ultimately concluded that the Edison Co. would never take the place of human musicians, although the sphere of the latter will be advanced considerably with the new electronic aids.

Lena Martell, a young thrush from Glasgow, is getting a big buildup from Decca to prep her for the American wax market. Last week she cut her first album, "Introducing Lena Martell," for release on the London label in the U.S. at the end of May. Her manager, George Elrick, who also handles Mantovani, persuaded London Records exec Joe Bott to hear her in a nitery and Miss Martell was inked to a three-year contract. Following release of the LP she'll tour the U.S. for tv dates and promotional stints.

Ralph T. Gould, 31 Forest Road, Cape Elizabeth, Maine, seeks any material or picture concerning turn-of-the century composer of band marches, R. B. Hall. It's a sentimental project but biographer Gould "would appreciate comments by (other) bandmasters as to their opinion of R. B. Hall as a band composer. He had over 100 marches published, among them 'Officer of the Day,' '10th Regiment,' 'Guard du Corps,' 'S.I.B.A.' and 'Indendentia.'"

Barbra Streisand walked off with most nominations for the Grammy awards to be made next month by the National Assn. of Recording Arts & Sciences. She won nominations for record of the year, album of the year and best female vocal performance. In addition, her Columbia Records LPs were nominated for best engineering, best cover design and best liner notes.

New Directions (U.S.) has just brought out "The Complete Poems of Wilfred Owen," many of which form the text of the new Benjamin Britten "Requiem," which has been widely publicized via the performances by the Boston Symphony and the London recording.

In last week's Chad Mitchell Trio ad, a printer's gremlin inadvertently omitted the name of their booking representatives—Agency for Performing Arts (APA).

'BMI Pubs' on Its Bd. Stirs ASCAP

Pressure is building up in the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers to prevent publishers with Broadcast Music Inc. affiliates to serve on ASCAP's board. At the present time, three publisher board members, The Big Three, Shapiro-Bernstein Music and Leeds Music, have BMI affiliates.

At a recent meeting of ASCAP's publishing advisory board, several publishers pressed ASCAP's administration to eliminate the so-called dual allegiance. While some ASCAP execs are sympathetic to the idea of barring such pubs from the board, they do not feel that ASCAP has any legal power to take such a step.

One of the publisher board members with a BMI affiliate, said the movement against dual affiliation was "poppycock." ASCAP, he said, is a business and so is BMI and all publishers want to give maximum protection to their business interests. "We want to make ASCAP as big and as rich as possible," he said, "precisely because it is good business for us to do so."

Hollywood USA No Bargain at $1.25 Top; HMS Bounty Moored at 50-90c Rap

By EDDIE KALISH

At $1.25 for adults and 50c. for children's admission, the Hollywood U.S.A. pavilion is something of a disappointment. Primarily an uninterestingly - deployed assembledge of sets, plus a small museum and some displays of props and such, the outdoor exhibit is so far lacking the essential color and glamour associated in the public mind with the film colony.

A replica of Grauman's Chinese Theatre serves as the entrance to the exhibit, with places for cemented footprints of visiting celebs outside, a la the actual spot. So far Federico Fellini, Guilieta Masina, George Murphy (a coplanner of the pavilion) and Jean-Pierre Aumont, Sonja Henie, Arlene Francis, Constance Bennett and Maggi McNellis have left their marks. The latter group did so in a ceremony on opening night which drew the attention of several fairgoers.

Sets include the "Cleopatra" throne room plus some statues, an exterior from "The King and I," the chariots from "Ben-Hur" and "Fall of the Roman Empire" and a small piece of the set from the latter pic, the President's office from "Seven Days in May," an interior from "Unsinkable Molly Brown," a large "West Side Story" tenement exterior (with a credit sign mispelling Mirisch as "Mirish" and omitting reference to UA, 7 Arts and Robert Wise) and an exterior and a barroom interior from the tv series, "Gunsmoke," and an operating roim setup which is supposed to be from "Dr. Kildare.'"

The museum contains such items as Marilyn Monroe's dress from "Seven Year Itch," some Cecil B. DeMille memorabilia (camera, chair and megaphone), heads demonstrating the makeup used for Tony Randall in "Seven Faces of Dr. Lao," the Friberg oil paintings of "10 Commandments" sets and other things like set sketches, costumes, props, mockups and pix of stars.

Uniformed male and femme guides stand around and spiel some chatter about the displays. Actors and actresses who were to be in costumed attendance on the sets, a factor which would help considerably, were absent on opening day. Perhaps more interesting than the bare sets would have been a

The Masonic Grill

The Masonic Brotherhood has a white stucco display and reception building near Gate No. 1 at the World's Fair. The front room is dominated by a plaster statue of G. Washington in his Masonic apron. Busts of Pershing, Admiral Byrd, Bobbie Burns and other brothers are on pedestals. Memorabilia of the lodge, a roll of past Grand Masters, a global map of Masonry are on view.

Rear room is a lounge Presence of an electric organ suggests that Masonic rites are contemplated. The fraternal order raised some $600,000 to finance its participation at the Fair.

IT'S A NON-CYPRIOTIC GREENWICH VILLAGE

Hip Cypriots could take a lesson in international relations from the musicians who make up the Near East Ensemble at the Village Gate. Greek bandleader George Stratis, who heads the group, has set a benefit for Yavuz Tonton, Turkish dumbelek player, hospitalized with tuberculosis. Stratis' men will contribute a night's pay, Gate boniface Art D'Lugoff donates a night's admissions for the benefit, set for next Wed. (29).

Sitting in with the band will be American singer Chris Connor, Argentine guitarist Jorge Morel, Greek-American singer Stephanie and exotic dancer Little Athens.

LONE SEGREGATED SHOW

Clairol Restricts Its Pavilion To Femmes Only

One mark of individuality that the Clairol exhibit can claim is that it is the only segregated exhibit at the Fair. The hair-coloring company has restricted its Color Carousel to women only. Exhibit manager Nick Schwartz said that visiting privileges may be extended later to hairdressers.

Femme visitors fill out forms about hair problems, are seated in a booth on the carousel, the forms are fed into a computer and while they're waiting, they're regaled with music (Johnny Desmond singing) and a short talk on hair care during the 6-min. ride. To keep mates from getting fidgety, an exterior exhibit is provided of paintings which emphasize attractive hairdos. Also on exterior are a series of plastic bubbles into which femmes can peek. They see a mirror topped with various color hairdos to allow them to see how they would look with hair of a different color. Smaller bubbles are provided for tykes to keep them peaceful while mama works her way through the various shades. Kids see themselves as Superman, pirates, etc.

When leaving, femmes are given results of computer tests.

AVIS' ANTIQUER

But Hertz Puts You In the You-Know-Where

The Avis Rent-a-Car layout is a "drive-it-yourself" antique car ride, pegged at 50c for adults and 35c for kids. A lengthy spin in the models of old cars is given. Located near the large industrial exhibits of some of the major exhibitors and far from the amusement section of the Fair, the setup stands to do solid business as a diversion for the junior set and accompanying adults as well.

Avis has a booth out front at which one can obtain info about the company's car rental biz. Also, various items such as maps, folders, stickers and the like are available on request. These things all plug the company, natch, but are also nice gratis souveniers. This booth is directly on the street and is separate from the ticket stand for the antique car ride itself.

Another auto rental company, Hertz, also has a booth at the Fair. It is located at the base of the Transit Authority heliport restaurant and serves as an auxiliary ticketselling spot for the TA site. Also, one can arrange to rent a car (not for Fair use) at the booth and obtain travel information. Other free service is provided, such as the making of plane, train etc. reservations. Several uniformed girls man the booth, the main purpose of which is to be a service, as opposed to offering an exhibit.

Hawaiian Pavilion's Hip-Weavers, May Be Surprise 'Girlie' Click

The Hawaiian Pavilion, for which 25c is the normal admission through a turnstile, gave a huge extra on the opening day (Wed.), permitting those who paid that sum to see its show for free, although the normal nick, once the layout is in operation, will be $2.50 and $3.50 in its 1,000-seat theatre. This price scale, although high for this show which will run approximately 90 minutes, is in keeping with the tariffs charged by its neighbors in the Lake Amusement Area.

It could be the surprise of the Lake area. The Hawaiian layout seems to provide the nearest thing to a "girlie" show in the belt. Naturally, the connotation of Hawaii and hula is inevitable, and it's probably its bestselling point.

This Polynesian package moves along at its best when the girls are in their hip-weaving endeavors. The femmes are cute, shapely and wriggly, which seems a good deal for fairgoers. It's not as forte in the legendary and ceremonial department, nor when the acts go on.

There is a profusion of talent, with a lot of editing needed by most of the turns. The comedy is by Inny Young, a Chinese, who starts out with a ribbon dance and thence into jive. There's also Tom Lesley, who does have a good style, even if the mainland gags are switched around to Hawaii. Violet Ortiz and Ollie Crowell are pleasant singers, Fely Gabriel does a ceremonial number as does Foi Foi.

Layout is produced by Sterling Mossman. Jose.

Fair's Inaugural Talks

Despite the drizzle which marred the opening morning of the N.Y. World's Fair last Wed. (22) the official agenda was conducted, as scheduled, in the Singer Bowl, a stadium intended for sports and other special events. A red and blue striped awning protected those on the speakers platform. The public was divided in various numbered sections—one for press, one for members of Fair Corp., and so on. The chill of the day cut down attendance. Even so, there were thousands present.

They heard Richard Tucker sing the national anthem. Thomas J. Deegan, the exec veep of the Fair, presided, introduced Francis Cardinal Spellman, Postmaster-General John A. Gronpuski, Robert Moses himself, who confined himself to a few paragraphs, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller who put on a pitch for the N.Y. State Pavilion and lavished praise on everybody, including the Democrats.

The much-needed amusing touch on the dismal morning came from ex-President Harry S. Truman, who said it had been an invitation from President Johnson and that word from the White House occupant was a novelty for him, an indirect allusion to Ike who never fancied Harry. Mrs. Indira Gandhi of India spoke for the international contingent, wisely and attractively.

President Johnson drove directly into the Bowl, alighting from a limousine and mounting the platform. It was then that everybody became aware of the protection in depth of the Secret Service.

The Singer Bowl is surely one of the most useful structures at this Fair. It is open to special events, the sewing machine company contenting itself with using the street front space under the grandstand for its own commercial displays.

World's Fair Show Reviews

To B'way With Love

Angus G. Wynne Jr. & Compass Fair Inc. presentation of revue in 41 scenes (no intermission). Producer, George Schaefer; exec producer, Gordon R. Wynne Jr.; directed by Morton da Costa; dances and musical numbers staged by Donald Saddler; costumes, Freddy Wittop; scenery, Peter Wolf; lighting, Jean Rosenthal; music adapted and arranged by Philip J. Lang; conductors: Franz Allers, Oscar Kosarin, James Leon. Opening April 22, '64 at Music Hall at the Texas Pavilions, N.Y. World's Fair; $4.80 top.

When the N.Y. World's Fair of 1964-65 opened last Wednesday (22) only one show business unit, as such, was in shape to give a performance. Hence, "To Broadway With Love" achieved both a boast as to its own accomplishment and a boost for the amusement section, which it brought alive on that historic day of civic confusion and faltering production timetables.

That the show was not only ready but good means that the Texas syndicate and its professional showmen were home safe. The significant compliment is that this revue, deriving from American musical comedy back to early minstrels down to the present day, was put together and delivered in neat order on time by persons who knew what they were doing.

Production is intended for three performances daily, running 90 minutes and scaled to $4.80. Any small details at the premiere which still needed tightening may be disregarded on the assumption that, with the appearance of these comments, they shall already have been made. This is a thoroughly professional show, produced by George Schaefer, staged by Morton Da Costa, choreographed by Donald Saddler and conducted by Franz Allers.

It is presented in a mammoth music hall on the ground floor of the cluster known as the Texas Pavilions (the plural stressed). Upstairs there is an old western saloon, as large as Texas and as loud, where cafe acts give out.

There was essential wisdom in refraining from dialog, comedy skits or any deviation from song and dance. Resultantly, the tempi never slacken. But there are humorous bits. Indeed many of them. These are, however, along the way, inherent in the revived songs and stereotypes of yesteryear. Which is not to discount the probable contributions of original material from Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick.

That a great many people worked very hard to attain this smoothness is the essential judgment. New theatrical ground "To Broadway With Love" does not break. But old things it does freshly with great competence and flair. Helping with the historic perspective are a number of smartly selected and arranged old silent movies, some back to 1900. Without comment, the juxtaposition often triggers a giggle. Beatrice Cunningham and John Schultz did the sequencing. Above the proscenium arch there is a running electric sign which also helps frame the references to nostalgic appeal.

Max Liebman's 'Autofare' For Chrysler a Classy Live-Puppet-Film Show

Chrysler's "Autofare," one of the "big three" (along with GM's Futurama and Ford's Space City) in the Transportation Area, is divided into five island areas surrounded by water. Each island is a separate exhibit but combined with the others via bridges. On opening day, "Design Island," one of the areas, was not yet in operation, although it appeared completed.

Biggest area and biggest attraction is the centrally-located circular theatre (actually four theatres of 625 seats each) housing the 24-min. "Show-Go-Round," produced by Max Liebman. Associate producer on the show is Mitchell Grayson. Writing was done by Liebman and Lucille Kallen. "Show-Go-Round" is presented on a revolving stage divided into quadrants so that various phases are being seen simultaneously by each of the four audiences. It is part live-part marionette-part film. After a brief intro by a live emcee-host (Dick Higgs, Ron Beattie, Mike Masters or John Fowler), action segues into interplay between emcee and a marionette, then into a 9-min. presentation by Bil Baird's marionettes. This is followed by a 9-min. film, directed by Bill Hobin and hosted by Bob Hope. Show winds with return to emcee and 3-min. wrap-up of sales pitch. The entire program, which lauds Chrysler engineering enterprise, with emphasis on experimental turbine engine, is continuous for 12 hours. Four shifts of personnel are involved. A working turbine-engine powered Chrysler outside makes a continuous circular drive around one of the exhibits. There is no vocal spiel although never-ending passage of the car causes considerable comment.

Emcee-hosts and puppeteers work on an Equity basis. Show is geared for 72 complete performances (four at a time) in a working day.

Other areas offer novelty attractions—a walk-through facsimile of a Chrysler engine, with the giant moving parts designed to resemble people, insects, animals, etc. At another is a section of a real assembly line along which visitors can ride while seated in the chassis of a car supposedly being assembled. Everything in exhibit is free and attendants are uniformly pleasant, well-drilled and courteous. Robe.

SWEDEN PAVILION OK FOR POPULAR IMPACT

You can't miss the Sweden Pavilion with its familiar blue color and it should prove one of the more popular spots with exhibits that hold appeal for every member of the family. Admission is free. The males are certain to be fascinated by the continuous working demonstration of electric power put on by ASEA (Allmanna Svenska Elektriska Aktiebolaget), the Swedish electrical company.

The 12-min. show breaks down technology of high-voltage power into short segments, easy to follow on a tremendous relief map, with a running history of the growth of Swedish electrical power. Accompanying sound effects and electronic music are fascinating and pooped pedestrians can sit on a huge slate bench if so inclined. ASEA keeps three technicians on hand at all times. Show winds with a wild, crackling lightning display that would warm the cockles of Dracula's innards.

Rest of industrial area is devoted to Swedish progress in aircraft, shipping, mining, matches etc. An adjoining retail shop displays handicrafts—silver glass, toys, cutlery, etc. Some items are for sale but prices are same as local retail outlets. An adjoining restaurant and bar was not open until 4 p.m. opening day, but will offer smorgasbord.

Abbe's Single Debut

Columbus, O., April 28.

Abbe Lane, teamed with hubby Xavier Cugat for nearly a decade, will make her first appearance as a single at Danny Deeds' Maramor supper club May 11-16. The couple recently announced their separation.

Miss Lane's act includes a dance team and a 14-piece orchestra.

H'wood Exhibit Spells a (Bad) Cast

With a consistency that must be admired, the sign painter for George Murphy's "Hollywood Pavilion" came up with some of the most unusual spellings to be found on the entire Fair site.

At Wednesday's (22) opening, with some of the exhibit's departments not operating, visitors were greeted with a sign that read "Rehersal only." Inside, when it came to the names of actors and films, variety took over. "Salome" became "Solome," Mirisch became Mirish, Gladys Cooper came out Copper, Tallulah Bankhead was Tallulla, Jeanette MacDonald switched to McDonald and "Lady Windemere's Fan" was spelled "Lady Windimere's Fan."

Some excellent minature sets by Richard Whorf, although labeled "Scenes from Great Pictures," were either unidentified as to film or mislabeled with such titles as "Elizabeth Rex" and "Antony and Cleopatra." Guides, while energetic and courteous, were no students of motion pictures. What an opportunity for a film buff! Most of them admitted not knowing much about the exhibits (which are generally excellent) but a few overzealous types ventured plenty of wrong information, such as identifying the Whorf miniature set tagged "Antony and Cleopatra" as "not the one with Elizabeth Taylor but the one Vivien Leigh did." [Miss Leigh and Claude Rains costarred in Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," a UA 1946 release].

However, it isn't likely that Murphy can be too critical of his poor spellers. The first of the signed concrete blocks at the Pavilion entrance (a la Grauman's Chinese) has been signed "George Mirphy."

FAIR: 'INTERNATIONAL' ENOUGH

Is This the Fair's Worst Bottleneck?

Many of the annoyances and incompletions of opening day at the N.Y. World's Fair may be shrugged off as certain to be corrected and more or less expected, given human nature. But at least one major blueprint misfortune seems built in and beyond correction. This concerns the route taken by Greyhound buses from the transportation section of the Fair across the bridge (over the expressway, that is) to the Amusement Sector.

The roadway is clearly too narrow for vehicles of this size. Worse, the course is full of sinuous turns. Buses are bunched deliberately as a necessary precaution against snarls which would be even worse than the delays which such "time and flow control" create. At certain corners the turn is so sharp each bus is guided around by a ground jockey. Greyhound has trouble-shooters everywhere and inspectors in small cars cruising. But it seems impossible that the bottlenecks can ever be avoided, given the terrain, the roundabout course, the bus stations a block and more from such main points as the Texas Pavilion.

Naturally the Greyhound people (obviously trying and seemingly somewhat desperate from their own frustrations) will improve the system but this can only be within an incredibly poor master-plan. A trip from the General Motors building to the Texas Pavilion took 40 minutes. Ten would have been reasonable. It was so exasperating to the people headed for the Texas stand that Greyhound starters took them off one bus and moved them ahead to the one parked at the turn, saving perhaps five to eight minutes.

'Peace' Breaks Out Among Crafts

Fair Beset By Rival Job Claims of IATSE Mechanics And IBEW Cable Handlers

The jurisdictional labor dispute at the N.Y. World's Fair between International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees studio mechanics Local 52 and International Brotherhood of Electricians Local 3, involving the hauling of cables and other electrical work to be done in connection with filming at the Fair, has been settled.

After many meetings between reps of both unions and the possibility of strike actions by those involved, the matter has been worked out to coincide with the working relationship practiced by the unions under normal conditions. Differences had first developed when Local 3 pressed for the right to handle all electrical work (cable hauling, hookups etc.)

Press, Radio-TV Score With All the World's Fair That's Fit to Read & See

The New York World's Fair is getting some of the most intensive newspaper, radio and television coverage of any recent event. Amount of interest is pointed up by the fact that the press building on the grounds not only contains quarters for the major news services and dark rooms for photographers, but also cubicles for local newspapers which have stationed full-time staffs at this kingsized exhib.

So far, there's been no lack of reading matter in the Flushing Meadows show. The most impressive coverage has been by the New York Times which has a large staff parading the grounds for the various events, and also has assigned specialists such as Gay Talese to look for odd angles.

In addition, the Times' sizable cultural staff including John Canaday of the art section; Howard Taubman, drama; Howard C. Schoemberg, music; food sector's Craig Claiborne, and other staffers and special writers combined to provide coverage that would have done credit to the opening of World War II.

The Times also reached into the rarified writings of its critic emeritus, Brooks Atkinson, and its Washington pundit, James Reston, for special stories. On Thursday (23), its reports on the opening day amounted to six pages in the inside following its page one leadin.

The Times' coverage has been smaller since the preem, but nonetheless still impressive enough to outstrip any other publication.

It's not to say that the other New York dailies didn't do a complete job of coverage. Lacking the Times manpower and space, most of the other dailies showed a fine brand of journalism in their treatment of the preem but few rated even a close second to the Times.

Macy's-Tells-Gimbel's

The Ted Mack Amateur Show will provide World's Fair entertainment twice weekly with public auditions to be held at the RCA Pavilion at the Flushing Meadows expo. Those qualified will be put on its regular tele show.

Unexplained portion of the deal lies in the fact that although the public auditions take place at RCA, which is the parent of NBC-TV, the telecasts will be on CBS-TV.

Churches at Fair Vs. 'Showmanship'

Open the first day but incomplete and sans exterior identification, the Protestant Pavilion proved a walk-through of pedestrian imagination, to the subjective reaction of a VARIETY staff reporter, himself a Protestant. True there were interesting insights to some missionary activities in remote and backward lands. But mostly this layout was lacklustre, a mere leaflet dispensary.

Its inhibition as regards showmanship inherent in the Protestant Ethic? The VARIETY man presumes to doubt it since the Billy Graham display and the Christian Science display are distinctly more intriguing. The Mormons and Greek Orthodox buildings were not visited on this first admittedly hurried inspecition.

Meanwhile the Vatican has one of the great magnets of the Fair, the original Michelangelo Pieta from St. Peter's in Rome. (Unintendedly this is a fine trailer for 20th-Fox's upcoming biopic of the sculptor, "The Agony and The Ectasy" by Irving Stone.)

Blind 'Seeing' the Fair

General Foods, which is sponsoring the 11 news arches throughout the N.Y. World's Fair, has taken another step into "meaningful public service" which they keynote as their reason for entry into this display. The food processor is underwriting the costs of a guidebook in Braille to be provided free to the blind attending the Fair.

It's estimated by the Lighthouse, the New York Assn. for the Blind, that approximately 100 blind will visit the Fair daily.

This number of sightless persons at the Fair will also give the Boy Scouts a chance at their daily good deed. Those accompanying blind persons are requested to go to the Boy Scout Encampment, where a Scout guide and a Braille book will be provided.

TRULY ETHNIC AND SIMULATED

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

The situation at the "International" zone in the N. Y. World's Fair in 1964 is too complex to lie open to so simple a first day criticism as that many of the pavilions were unready. Some of the exhibitions were privately-promoted, money-making American enterprises, and such primary nations as Britain, Russia, Italy, France, Holland and Germany are unrepresented.

Despite all of these defects, and though viewed in a bleak April drizzle, the zone must emerge as sufficiently "international" and distinctly fascinating. It seems probable that a dominating influence may be the new nations, but ancient cultures, of Asia, viz, India, Thailand, Pakistan, Indonesia, Korea, Taiwan Hong Kong, Philippines Malaysia, Polnesia.

A further reminder of the many changes from colonial to sovereign status since the N. Y. World's Fair of 1939 are the exhibits of other new nations in the Near East and Africa. Egypt, of course, now known as the United Arab Republic, is the world's oldest. Japan, too, has long been prominent in foreign trade and its pavilion promises to be a big hit.

Many of the displays are actually transplanted retail shops but the whole area acquires glamour because of the exotic native costumes and the large contingents of lovely girls in them. One is struck repeatedly by the dignity of the Japanese of both sexes and the quiet charm of the Indians, Indonesians and other Orientals. Every omen suggests that the Americans, in myriad hordes, will obtain a strong image of that part of the globe.

The alert presence on the grounds and in the bazaars of U.S. Customs inspectors evidences the extremes of cooperation that arm of the Treasury has accorded the Fair. A party of 12 men is stationed to expedite shipments which come directly to the site and are unpacked pending inspection. The complexity of this Customs operation was most apparent and the knowingness of the carefully-selected dozen.

Herewith capsulated impressions of the international zone on opening day:

Denmark: Seen through the windows enviously, it looked great but was excluding the public. Within, an invading force of free-loaders had taken over.

Ireland: An attractive display in

RCA's $1,000,000 Location at Fair

RCA's snappy pavilion at the Fair ($1,000,000 just for the building) is in a choice position near the entry to the fairgrounds, but even with a remoter location would still be a cinch to be swamped by the folks.

The lure is obviously twofold: a chance to glimpse all that electronic razzmatazz and go one up on the neighbors back home, and an opportunity for a closeup portrait of self on the tint tube.

This is accomplished by moving small groups of visitors along the ramps that circle the color studio and jazzy control room, with comely girl guides chattering from rote. Their script is superficial at best, but obviously it's impossible to make the layman hip in a matter of minutes.

The language here is multilingual, as needed, which of course is the case elsewhere at the Flushing spread in anticipation of the foreign contrib to the Fair box-office.

The chaperoned groups traversing the ramps are perforce small,

Mechanical and Union Problems Stall Leonidoff and Dick Button

The N.Y. World's Fair Lake Amusement area is not very gay. Producers are having more than normal share of difficulties ranging from mechanical malfunction to cast complaints involving the American Guild of Variety Artists.

Personnel of the Dick Button-Paul Feigay "Ice Travaganza" were closted with AGVA yesterday (Tues.) in an effort to come to terms on several points. One of the major issues was the amount of overtime for extra rehearsals at 12 hours daily for six days a week.

Question of transportation was also involved. Some of the cast had been hired in Europe and the producers advanced monies to bring them to the U.S. with the understanding that they would pay back the coin. AGVA rules, however, require employers to pay all fares. At press time yesterday (Tues.) no adjudication had yet been made on this issue.

Mechanical gremlins are plaguing the Leon Leonidoff-Meyer Davis "Wonder World." One of the most expensive items in this show is the reconstruction of the covering which would make this layout an all-weather show. Much of the canvas has been torn by the March winds and the surplus of cold and rainy days. The canvas must be put up anew. In addition, the boiler heating the pool to the required 60-65 degrees required by AGVA hasn't been working.

"Wonder World" has been hit with broken cables and other failures during the past week. Leonidoff hopes to get the show going this weekend, and Button is aiming for a bow early next week.

Under 1,000,000 First Wk.

Bad weather breaks and fear of civil rights demonstrations are the two major factors which held the first week's attendance at the N.Y. World's Fair to less than 1,000,000. Figure for the first six days hit 866,838. At noon yesterday (Tues.) 28,872 admissions were clocked, which forecasts a total attendance in the area of 75,000. Bad weather on the opening day and yesterday held the totals down. The daily average based on the first six days wickets is 144,473.

Fair opened in the rain on Wednesday (22) with 92,646. Thursday's admissions hit 136,511; Friday, 134,674; Saturday, 201,865; Sunday, 200,248 and Monday hit 100,894.

N.J. Teamsters Signs Hell Drivers

The Teamsters Union made its first major entry into the ranks of performers working the N.Y. World's Fair. The Paterson (N.J.) local bypassed the Teamsters' N.Y. local and signed all performers on the Jack Kochman Hell Drivers, which has yet to open.

The American Guild of Variety Artists is preparing to contest this contract. The cast had been negotiating with AGVA, when suddenly the Teamsters took over the show. AGVA says that it may have to relinquish the Hell Drivers, but other performers, such as emcees, clowns and others, belong to the performing union. Whether the N.Y. Teamsters local will also protest the invasion of its jurisdiction by the Jerseyites remains to be seen.

RINGLING'S ONE-RING CIRCUS NOT YET READY

The Ringling Continental Circus was far from ready on opening day. Only about 30 of its 5,000 seats were installed and workmen were busily putting in others under the big top. The show's single ring is set up but, from the looks of things, the show won't be ready for action for some time.

The tent is constructed with no poles to obstruct the view from any seat. When ready, the show will last about an hour and 20 minutes. It will be a twice daily affair on weekdays and four times weekends, with admissions at $1, $2 and $3 for adults and children.

A Circus Museum, also not ready on opening day, will stand adjacent to the big show, containing exhibits from the Ringling Museum in Sarasota, Fla., displays constructed to show the history of the big show and other items. Also, a parade is to march through the fair from the circus once on weekdays and twice on weekends and holidays.

The Circus still has no opening date. Work couldn't proceed until two weeks ago because the possibility of snow collapsing the tent.

Adding to the circus difficulties was an attack by an enraged elephant on a 64-year old trainer who was taken to the Elmhurst Hospital in critical condition. The trainer, Joseph Barrie, was alone with the chained animal when it went beserk.

Lalapaloosa Biz

The Spanish Riding School of Vienna's Lipizzaner Horses continue to ride the SRO route. Their five-day stand at the Boston Garden hit a sellout $254,864.

The Columbia Concerts import also sold out in Washington and Philadelphia.

Fair's an 'Architectural Monstrosity,' Soviet-Born City Planner Contends

Minneapolis, April 28.

Lecturing at the U. of Minnesota school of architecture, Russian-born Oskar Stonorov, Philadelphia architect and city planner, declared "the present New York World's Fair may turn out to be a smashing success every other way, but architecturally it is a dismal failure."

Illustrating the theme of his talk, 'The Mass Transformation of Our Environment," Stonorov called the exposition "an architectural monstrosity." He added that the U.S. has the technology and building materials to improve its environment, but it is totally unprepared to perform the job.

"This is our dilemma, economically and politically," Stonorov said. "Here we are designing and building the most idiotic forms advertising our incapabilities in the New York World's Fair in which there is not a semblance of social or economic responsibility.

"The Fair is an architectural monstrosity which is serving only one purpose, and that is to attract the most stupid of visitors. It gets them in and shows them traveling to the moon, living in under-the-sea hotels and the like.

"This is the kind of utopia which a company like General Motors presents to the public in its $50,000,000 pavilion."

7-UP'S SANDWICHERY OK ON FAST SERVICE

Although the chilly opener didn't create much demand for cold drinks, 7-Up's International Sandwich Gardens should prove popular once the crowds really start moving. Completely outdoors, the gimmick is offering 16 different sandwiches, divided into four geographical areas—The Americas, The Pacific, Northern Europe and The Mediterranean. For $1.50, the customer selects an area type and gets four sandwiches (small but sufficient for a snack) plus all the 7-Up he can drink.

A musical combo will offer sporadic entertainment later. John Krimsky, boniface of The Strollers,

Promoters Prefer Arena, But Beatles Dig W.K. Spots Even for Less Loot

Denver, April 28.

The Beatles may be top exponents of uncultural rock 'n' roll but when it comes to concert halls they have a decided artistic leaning. At least that's the impression The Baja, a local promoting group, has picked up in negotiating on Aug. 26 Denver date for the British quartet.

"We have a Beatles commitment here in Denver," The Baja's Verne Byers points out, "for Red Rocks Amphitheatre. We are allowed to print 9,000 tickets at $6.60 each—gross $59,400. As promoters, we'd prefer to hold the concert at the University of Denver Stadium. Its 22,000 capacity at $3.50 per ticket would gross $77,000.

"However, it seems that in England, the image of the three big concert halls in the U.S. are Carnegie Hall, Hollywood Bowl and Red Rocks. So the powers-that be informed us that The Beatles would prefer playing Red Rocks even at considerably less gross than the Denver U. Stadium.

The Red Rocks date is set for Wednesday, Aug. 26. While tickets are now on sale at the $6.60 top, Byers adds, scalpers are already calling from as far away as Albuquerque offering to buy blocks of 100 tickets for resale at $10 each.

Record Detroit Price

Detroit, April 28.

The highest price ever paid for entertainers at Olympia Stadium will go to The Beatles when they make two appearances here Sept. 6. Olympia manager Nick Londes refused to disclose the figure but said it surpasses Elvis Presley's $25,000 for two shows a few years ago.

Olympia seats 12,500 but can go as high as 15,500 with temporary seats installed over the ice rink. Stadium usually is used for hockey games.

20G From Indpls. Fair

Indianapolis, April 28.

Indiana State Fair Board has booked The Beatles for two performances at the State Fair in Indianapolis Sept. 3. Prices will be the same for the two Beatles shows as for other fair shows. This ranges from $2 to $3.50. Act, which was set here by GAC, will get $20,000.

Tennessee Ernie Ford will headline the variety show at the fair Aug. 29-30. This will be his fifth appearance at the event. Andy Williams will star in the Labor Day weekend show, Sept. 5-7. The fair runs through Sept. 9.

Mols. Cops Urge Denial Of Dance Licenses To Murray License Holders

Minneapolis, April 28.

On the heels of the Federal court conviction and sentencing of the owner and eight employes of two now defunct Twin Cities' dance studios for operating fraudulently, the police department has recommended to the city council license committee that it deny dance studio licenses for future Arthur Murray franchises holders here.

The police department informed the committee that it had received complaints against previous Arthur Murray studio operations and that several law suits by their pupils are pending in the courts here against the operators.

Most of the complaints against Twin Cities' dance studios have come from elderly unmarried women who alleg they paid large sums for lessons in their quest for companionship and that the studios failed to keep promises made to them to induce the signing of contracts.

N.Y.'s Terp School Law

Albany, April 28.

A bill designed to correct "abuses" in dancing school contracts has been signed by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller. Introduced by Assemblyman Edwyn E. Mason of Delaware County and Senator Albert Berkowitz of Washington County, the measure provides that contracts for amounts in excess of $500, or for automatic renewal option with payment of more than $500, shall be valid only under certain conditions.

'Worst' Cultural Tour

the panning Adams rated from the State Dept.'s cultural exchange exec Glenn G. Wolfe.

When asked by Rooney to pick out the most unsuccessful program, Wolfe, without qualification, gave Adams that dubious distinction.

"I would say that from a success standpoint, or lack of success in properly representing the United States, the Joey Adams troupe was by far the worst," Wolfe averred.

Other 'Bad Choices'

Also inserted in the "bad choice" category by Wolfe were the Clarion Concerts and the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra. The problem with these groups was that they had never toured before and the trip was replete with minor problems, complaints and irritations, he said.

In the future, tours will be awarded to groups with such experience, Wolfe said.

Drawing dubious notices from Rooney were the Cozy Cole Jazz Review in Africa, Martha Graham and singer Barbara Allen.

When Wolfe explained that Miss Allen's $5,283 tour was a relatively low cost one, Rooney remarked, "They are always low figures. They are like Helen Hayes getting $1,500 a week."

Jose Limon

But most of the criticism was directed at Limon with Rooney exclaiming everything the dancer did was too expensive.

Noting that Limon often appeared at diplomatic parties after his performances, Rooney averred "$1,500 a week and we still have to buy him drinks at ambassadorial reception."

When Wolfe said Limon does not drink, Rooney retorted that sofe drinks often cost more than hard drinks overseas.

"Rooney's rebuttal to Wolfe's praise of Limon's professional ability was, "He did so well in Kuala Lampur and other places such as Singapore and Malaysia that the President had to send the Attorney General there later." He recanted on this remark slightly, averring it wasn't quite a fair assessment.

In a backhanded way Rooney said the program could have been worse. Opening the hearing, the chairman said cultural exchanges may be getting better, "because we haven't heard of anything derogatory in the past year. We haven't had any characters on the road. On the other hand, this may have reached such a high cultural level that it is over the heads of everybody."

Among the items requested by Rep. Frank Bow (R.-Ohio) and furnished by the State Dept. was a 10-year rundown of the cost and number of exchanges to South Vietnam, Cambodia, Cyprus, Panama, the Soviet Union, Cuba, Indonesia and France, all cannon-fodder for Republican foreign policy attacks.

SAMMY DAVIS JR.'S 3D SHOW AT COPACABANA

For the first time in five years, the Copacabana, N.Y. is scheduling three shows nightly. With Sammy Davis Jr. headlining, starting tomorrow (Thurs.) night, with Bob Melvin in support, the Jules Podell spot will put on a third show at 2 a.m. The last three-show nightly schedule was done by Louis Prima & Keeley Smith, who were then partnered martially and professionally.

Davis was originally scheduled to do a three-weeker for the Copa, but because of two postponements and Davis' commitments to start rehearsals for the upcoming legit musical "Golden Boy," date was pared to 10 days. Three-session sked is regarded as compensation.

Davis has been playing to SRO houses for several years at the Copa, and combination of his presence plus the fact that there will be a lot of extra visitors because of the World's Fair indicates that the Copa is likely to wrack up a new record.

BARNETT NONCOMMITAL ON GAC-FRANK COOPER

General Artists Corp. is reported acquiring the Frank Cooper Agency but GAC president Larry Barnett stated that there were "no negotiations presently going on." He declined to say whether there had been previous negotiations.

If the Cooper negotiations materialize he will have rejoined the office where he first made his start. He elft GAC about 18 years ago to found his own outfit.

New Crackdown Hits Hub B-Girls

Boston, April 28.

A police crackdown on B-girls and after hour liquor sales resulted in a permanent shutdown for the Tic Toc intimer on Tremont St. by the Boston Licensing Board Thursday (23). Liquor and other licenses at the night spot were lifted as of May 4. Spot had a big name jazz policy last summer.

Complaints against the Tic Toc charged "utter disregard for the warnings of police and the board, with B-girls allegedly continuing to mingle with—and exploit—customers by the purchase of alcoholic beverages, corsages and cigarettes and admission to commissions on such premises," during five nights of police surveillance in January and February.

The board heard complaints against the Stork Club, Charlestown; Roman restaurant, after hours; and 1-2-3 club, 123 Stuart St., B-girl solicitation of bubbly; LaSalle hotel, "so called B-girl activities, strip-tease acts, improper dancing, profanity by master of ceremonies, complaints in court against entertainers for violation of the true name law."

The board took the case of the La Salle hotel, which operates a theatre bar with matinee and night performances, under advisement and set tomorrow (Wed.) for airing of complaints.

Deputy Police Supt. John J. Slattery said the complaints are the result of a stepped up drive on B-girl and after hours operation in Boston. He said every large city has such violations, "but only one chain gives this trouble in Boston."

Cincy Jocks' Promotions

Cincinnati, April 28.

Disk jockeys of two Cincy radio stations are endeavoring to cash in on the popularity of the Beatles and the Dave Clark Five, to which they contributed in the grind of studio chores.

WSAI jocks got into the act first by sponsoring the Beatles for two performances June 4 at Cincy Gardens at $5 admission. Then the WCPO deejays latched on as sponsors of the second English combo for a single performance Aug. 27 in the Gardens at $2 and $3 admish.

Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, Switching to Name Policy To Lure 'Younger Crowd'

Ottawa, April 28.

This capital's poshest dine-and-dance spot, in historic Chateau Laurier Hotel, is switching from a band-with-singer to an entertainment policy. Changeover, which will be gradual, began last week with folksinger-zitherist Dorothy Callison doing 15-minute routines on the floor while vet Len Weekes Orch takes breaks. This format prevails Monday-thru-Thursday.

On Friday and Saturday there's a half-hour show, comprising baritone Leo Stephenson (who sings with the band), Miss Callison and Weekes doing a trumpet solo. Within four months hotel manager Myles F. Craston hopes to introduce a name policy, with a cover charge. At present it's no cover, no minimum.

With names, Craston hopes to get the young crowd back. He, incidentally, took over the managerial post Jan. 1 from C. A. Mann who retired. Prior to reining this Canadian National Railways inn, he managed the Ghana government's plush Ambassador Hotel in Accra.

House Reviews

Music Hall, N.Y.

"Fantasy and Fun," produced by Marc Platt, with Stan Porter, The Alcettys (2), Loki Troupe featuring Tonu & Teva; David Sokoloff; Music Hall Ballet, Rockettes, Music Hall Symphony Orch, directed by Raymond Paige; "Pink Panther" (UA), reviewed in VARIETY, Jan. 15, '64.

Fresh stage session at the Hall, which ranges from the "take me out to the ball game" atmosphere to a colorful Polynesian Island blowup, seems to be geared primarily for the out-of-towners here for the World's Fair. It's mostly sight stuff, including many of the amazing stage production tricks for which the Hall is famed.

For on thing, Russell Markert's renowned Rockettes make their entrance from a giant, gilded cage 45 feet wide and, 26 feet high. Their garb of flamingo-pink leotards also carries out the theme of being exquisite birds. Never could birds dance as this group does, and with the visiting firemen packing the audience opening night the applause was thunderous.

Marc Platt, who does a slick job of producing this show, also did the choreography for the ballet number which has the corps costumed like zebras (as in the film that follows on the screen). But at first glance, the dancers look to be highly colored candy sticks. A highly original bit.

The Alcettys, a tall, dark male and a comely femme assistant, put over a skilled bit of plate twirling and balancing. All the balancing and plate spinning is done by the man, with the payoff a fast spinning plate balanced atop some eight elongated sticks.

Part of this trick is to have the plate continue to spin while he builds the long pile of poles under it. His ability to let the poles sag sharply, and still keep the plate in motion is an eye-opener. He also twirls platters and other types of dishes, with balancing four wine-filled glasses and a lighted lamp good for plenty of mitting. Topflight for any spot.

Stan Porter is the lead singer in the close harmonizing by eight other males garbed in baseball uniforms. Quaintly enough, they all wear Met uniforms. The tunes, of course, are all associated with the national pastime. A good novelty.

The Loki Troupe, augmented by dancers from the ballet group and Rockettes, contrib an unusual bit of terping with the leaders stepping around on big drums and Loki swinging swords and lighted torch on a mammoth drum. Their act gains weight from an oversized setting on the vast Hall stage along with familiar mechanical gimmicks down to the smoke coming out of the stage floor.

David Sokoloff, composer and pianist, plays "Spanish Fantasy," as part of the Hall's Symphony Orch opening. It's expertly done, with Raymond Paige, per usual, scoring with his superior batoning. Stageshow is only about 40 minutes since "Pink Panther," the feature film, runs 115 minutes. This keeps the show down under three hours which is a "must" when the Hall is seeking a fast turnover. Theatre probably will need it, too, judging from the attendance on initial day.

Apollo, N.Y.

WWRL deejay show with Gene Chandler, Joe Tex, Wilson Pickett, Rufus Thomas, Valerie & Nick, The Contours (4), Reuben Phillips Orch.

This shouting show, fronted by the deejays of WWRL, N.Y., who are surrounded by disk talents they feature, is strictly for the Harlem mass trade. There is plenty of noise and suggestive animation, but little artistry.

Rufus Thomas, an authentic rhythm and blues talent, opens and is the show's top music man with his trio of rasping, beatful, piney-woods dog songs, "Walk the Dog," "Somebody Stole My Dog," "Can Your Money Do the Dog?"

There are three solo shouters in the spread, which from anybody's standpoint but the rocking, happy SRO crowds, is excessive. Among them — Gene Chandler, Wilson Pickett and Joe Tex.—only the latter has moved up from the primitive howls and gyrations that are a conversion of the gospel style to sex.

Tex has a sophistication in both the vocal style and—especially—projection, and does a routine with the mike stand—belting it back and fourth during a number—that has to be seen for appreciation.

Valerie & Nick wail inscrutable lyrics, and the Contours (4) shout and dance in an exhausting turn that if it were to be seen on the Ed Sullivan show would put the Central Time Zone in a mass dead faint.

Presuming the show's big box office is made up mainly of WWRL listeners, it is interesting that the audio fans' favorites are virtually all male, with Valerie the only femme on the bill. WWRL deejays —Hal Jackson, Rocky G, Enoch Gregory and Magnificent Montague rotate emceeing. Reuben Phillips and the house band do a good job in toting this bargeful of special arrangements.

'Bevhillbilly' Package Hits 18-City Tour Trail May 15 With a 150G Nut to Crack

Hollywood, April 28.

A p.a. package topped by trio of "BevHillbilly" stars, Irene Ryan, Max Baer and Donna Douglas, hits an 18-city trail May 15 for two weeks of shows with a talent-plus-expenses nut of some $150,000 to crack. Tour was revealed Friday (24) by Eddie Sherman, who packaged the unit with Associated Booking for Concerts Inc.

Sherman added, however, that auditoriums to be played have minimum seating capacities of 10,000 (in Chicago they'll play a 20,000 seater) and at a $5 top he envisions a per-show take potential of from $40 to $50,000.

Others in troupe include Homer & Jethro, Spike Jones and Helen Grayco, Good Time Singers, Rudenko Bros., Maldanado Dancers. All are in on straight salaries, save the "HillBillies" who garner percentage of gross.

Show goes in on a flat fee against slice of overall action. Sherman declares that many sites are from 50 to 100% sold out to supermarkets who buy and re-sell to patrons.

Included in nut are Sid Kuller and Sid Miller's special "Hill-Billy" material, Jerry Dolin's music arrangements, Jack Baker's choreography and a 78 passenger chartered airliner.

RHEINGOLD-TUBORG'S DUAL TAVERN DEAL

Rheingold's eating-drinking combination, in conjunction with Danish Tuborg Beer, which it imports, offers Fairgoers a choice of an informal beergarden breathing spell; a Tavern (covered, but open on one side) with stand-up sandwich-short order foods; or the plush Post House. Latter is operated by Greyhound Post Houses, a Chicago operation, who also run the "Main Street, USA" exhibit.

The Post House is a facsimile of a 1904 N.Y. restaurant with crystal chandeliers, heavy carpets, red-flocked wallpaper, costumed waiters and hostesses.

It's open 10 a.m. to midnight, every day, with generally a la carte selections up to $4. Anyone over 18 gets free beer (either brand with meals). Drawback is lack of hatcheck room and tiny entrance-waiting area which causes fast pileup of customers.

Welk Cuts His Caper Tab To 7½G for Special Gig

Los Angeles, April 28.

Lawrence Welk troupe, whose regular stipend for past two years has been flat $20,000 per one nighter on tours the group undertakes, will do a stand at downtown Statler Hotel here May 5 for flat $7,500.

Cut in fee was arranged in view of fact the caper is for a convention to be held of Building Service Employees union; also because attendance is limited to conventioneers. General public is barred.

Nev. Commission Reserves Decision On Silver Slipper Phoney Dice Raps

Las Vegas, April 28.

After a two-day hearing in Carson City the Nevada Gaming Commission began deliberations Friday (24) over a charge of dice cheating at the Silver Slipper here. Chairman Milton Keefer said it would be "a matter of days at most" before the commission decides on the gambling license held by Robert O. Schulze, Anthony (Tony) Canino and Frank King.

Earlier, the commission dismissed a charge of card cheating at the Las Vegas Strip establishment, involving blackjack games in February and March of 1963. Commissioners ruled the year-old charge was disposed of by the Gaming Control Board when it notified casino managers of the infraction and the dealer was fired.

The charge was revived after the board accused the Silver Slipper of using altered dice on a craps table the night of March 27. The five dice were taken by gaming agents during a routine check.

In his closing arguments, Norman Samuelson, special attorney for the control board, said the five dice taken all had edgework on the six and one faces, increasing their surface area. He showed records that the house was losing on the craps game before the crooked dice were put into play.

Schulze and Canino both testified they knew nothing of the incident. King is in Texas, excused from the proceedings. Schulze owns nearly all the stock in the $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 business. Canino is his casino manager.

Slipper attorney Tom Foley moved to have the charge of crooked dice removed. He said the emergency closing of the casino was unconstitutional and harsh. Samuelson countered that gambling is a privilege, not a right in the state.

Brubeck's Waikiki Date

Honolulu, April 28.

Dave Brubeck Quartet is due in for a single outdoor jazz concert Saturday (2) in the Waikiki Shell, under Concerts Inc. sponsorship.

Aussie May Curb Alien Acts' 'Take Home' Pay

Melbourne, April 28.

Australia is mulling restrictions on the "take home" pay of overseas performers who work Down Under. In Canberra last week Premier Sir Robert Menzies was asked if the government will study whether foreigners — particularly stage, tv and radio stars—should take big earnings out of Australia.

Menzies replied that he will discuss the problem with other ministers and consider whether Australia should pass laws similar to regulations in the U.S. which restrict the outflow of aliens' earnings.

Judy's 30G For 2 Aussie Shows

Sydney, April 28.

Judy Garland, making her Down Under debut, will appear at the Sydney Stadium May 13 and 16 under the banner of Harry M. Miller's Pan Pacific Promotions. She'll receive $30,000 for the two separate concerts. Singer will also do a one-nighter May 20 at Melbourne's Festival Hall for the same promoter.

Miss Garland, who will work solo for two hours at each performance, will be backed by a 33-piece local orchestra. Sydney Stadium has a capacity of 12,000. It will be scaled to a $6 top. Following her Aussie dates she will plane to Hong Kong.

Miller's Pan Pacific outfit, which is less than a year old, beat out several other promoters in inking Miss Garland. Previously, the firm has imported such Yank headliners as Louis Armstrong, Sammy Davis Jr., Shelley Berman, Eartha Kitt and Allan Sherman. Later this year it will present pianist Artur Rubinstein.

Nev. Congressman Ends Vegas Coin Shortage But Solution Is Temporary

Las Vegas, April 28.

Rep. Walter S. Baring, D-Nev., said Friday (24) that he has contacted the director of the U.S. Mint regarding complaints from Las Vegas businessmen of a shortage of small coins.

"I have been assured the coins will be shipped to Las Vegas immediately," Baring, Nevada's lone rep in the lower house, said. "Back in 1963, I was made aware of the shortage of small coins and discussed the matter with the House banking and currency committee.

"The shortage is due in part to the fact that the existing Mint is not large enough to turn out a sufficient supply, though it is being worked around the clock."

Baring said funds were authorized in August, 1963, to construct a new Mint, and funds to accomplish the construction were included in the Treasury appropriation bill which passed the House March 24, and is now pending before the Senate.

"This is actually one of the reasons they want to hold off minting silver dollars," Baring said, "to give full time and attention to producing the small coins. The critical situation will probably not be alleviated until a new Mint can be built."

Jerry Levy Hits Ex-Client Joey Bishop With 437G Suit

Hollywood, April 28.

Personal manager Jerry Levy whacked ex-client Joey Bishop with a $437,072 breach-of-contract suit filed Friday (24) in Los Angeles Superior Court. The Levy-Bishop association began in 1954 and was terminated by the entertainer in 1963.

Levy, who names Bishop's production company Josylar Inc. as codefendant in action, asserted his complaint that he was "largely responsible" for the tv comic's success. Bishop's NBC-TV skein Incidentally, is not on web's schedule for next season.

British Comics Win $2,733 Pact Breach Suit Over U. S. Service Base 'Auditions'

London, April 28.

Comedians Jimmy Jewel and Ben Warriss have been awarded $2,733 damages with costs in the High Court here for breach of contract by agents who booked them to appear at U.S. services bases in Germany.

Justice Megaw held that the agents—Hope Levy Productions of London and Mrs. Gisela Gunther of Frankfurt—wrongfully repudiated the agreement by insisting the comedians should give an audition for their act.

Comics had contracted to give 20 performances in Germany between March 22 and 31, 1962 for $2,520, with travelling expenses. When they arrived in Frankfurt they were told that they would not be allowed to give their performance unless they auditioned for reps of the U.S. services. Jewel and Warriss maintained they were not obliged to do so and returned to the U.K.

The agents, however, maintained that it was not an audition but a "screening" that was required.

Justice Megaw said no criticism could be made of the representatives of the U.S. Armed Forces. The trouble arose from the defendants' failure to insure that the contract they offered the plaintiffs corresponded with the obligations Mrs. Gunther had to the Americans.

A counter-claim by Hope Levy Productions for damages for breach of contract was dismissed with costs.

Variety Artists Federation—which had pressed the case for members Jewel and Warriss—sees the decision as a victory. Union has been endeavoring since 1952 to bring to an end a practice of the American Armed Forces Command in Germany that requires artists with a pact signed for a season's work to give auditions at any or every camp they are playing, and for the contract to be determined if the audition is unsatisfactory, with no obligation to give any reasons why.

VAF will now renew its campaign to persuade American military authorities to come to "some practical contractual arrangement by which the principle of "screening" may be carried out in the U.K. prior to signing of the contract.

'Holiday on Ice' In Soviet Encore

"Holiday on Ice" will be the first major American show to repeat a tour of the USSR. The Morris Chalfen production has been booked through the U.S. Cultural Exchange Program to play Leningrad May 10 to 26; Moscow, May 29 to June 28, and Kiev, July 2 to 12. "Holiday" last toured Russia in 1959, and was the first major American icer to be booked in the Soviet Union.

Chalfen is again expected to lose considerable coin on this tour, although his losses will be pared somewhat by the fact that some components of the show have been touring Europe. The European skaters will be replaced by Yanks prior to the Russian opening.

Chalfen, in addition to the company set for the USSR, will have a second troupe touring Europe. Another is now on the road in the Mexican provinces, and the show currently in the U.S. will play Mexico City at the conclusion of its American dates. Central and South America will get the unit now in Mexico.

Samtsova O'Seas Dates

Ottawa, April 28.

MISS PAT COLLINS

"The Hip Hypnotist"

NEW YORK

"Miss Pat Collins, the blond, willowy 'hip hypnotist' from Los Angeles, has added New York to her conquests . . . she's practicing her magic these nights upon subjects she entices on stage at Basin St. E. . . . It's Show Biz and excellent! . . . And she will hypnotize the public into packing the joint . . ." EARL WILSON (N.Y. Post).

"Miss Collins is ham—pure show business, comic ham . . . Her act is most entertaining . . ." ROBERT ALDEN—New York Times.

"The most amusing, most unusual nightclub act in years—hypnotist Pat Collins at Basin Street East. I know folks who have gone to see her three, four nights in a row! . . ." BERT BACHARACH—Journal-American.

"She performs in good taste . . . This sexy Svengali is for real in her interesting, offbeat offering . . ." BOB SALMAGGI (Herald Tribune)

"Nothing like hypnotist Pat Collins has happened before on the local club scene, if indeed on this planet. This West Coast Svengali is hip. She is every inch the showman and she confines herself to entertainment. Her success is such that the hour passes too quickly and chances are you may be seduced into a return visit. Now how many night club acts can you say THAT about?" EUGENE BOE (Cue Magazine).

"Pat Collins is a very funny and very pretty girl . . . her act is great . . . her act is great . . . her act is great JACK SCHWARTZ (Newsday).

"Not only is she an entertainer, but she is one of the funniest club acts on the current scene . . ." HAROLD STERN (Bell-McClure Synd).

"Basin Street East has come up with a dilly of an attraction . . . a young, blonde shapely lady called Pat Collins . . . To put it mildly, she had every one in the crowded room in a tizzy . . ." NICK LAPOLE (Journal-American).

"With the quick comedy patter of a sideshow pitchman, loaded with double entendre lines, Pat Collins plays it strictly for laughs, and there are laughs aplenty . . ." MARTY BURDEN—New York Post.

"Pat Collins, the hypnoteuse, has a unique act at Basin Street East—and a highly diverting one . . ." LOUIS SOBOL (Journal-American).

HOLLYWOOD

"Hollywood royalty steals reverently these nights to the cave of an Amazonian blonde with Neferiti eyes—her interlude act is as varied as the volunteers who participate." TIME MAGAZINE.

"She fractured us." HEDDA HOPPER.

"Hollywood's latest craze is a pretty hypnotist who looks like a blonde Sophia Loren—she is getting the Hollywood crowd onstage in droves." JIM BACON, AP.

"Saloon biz on the Strip surged with the ropes up for hypnoteuse Pat Collins at the Interlude." ARMY ARCHERD, Daily Variety.

"All of Hollywood is mesmerized." MIKE CONNOLLY, Hollywood Reporter.

"A witty, funny, intriguing performer." KUP, Chicago Sun-Times

"I am writing this under the spell of the most fantastic performance I have ever seen in a night club. She is entrancing—both in style and physique." ART SEIDENBAUM, L.A. Times.

"There are hypnotists and there are showmen. But there is only one Pat Collins." SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

"The return of Pat Collins heralds a lively and lucrative summer season. Miss Collins accents the entertainment facet and plays down the hocus pocus . . . The star of her act is the subject who comes out of the audience." TUBE, Daily Variety

"Hypnotist Pat Collins cast a spell over stars and tourists alike at the Interlude . . . Showfolks love to wach one another." VERNON SCOTT, U.P.I.

World's Fair Show Reviews

To B'way With Love

gram it is not possible to make subtle distinctions as to individuals. Rather the impression shapes of team effort, though Morton Da Costa's strong hand must be assumed throughout. It is too guessy to say anything of Oscar Kosarin as a conductor and James Leon as associate musical director. One imagines the burdens which must inhere in the adaptation and arrangement of so varied a score. This is given deserved prominence (to Philip J. Lang) in the credits.

Robert Merriman is production stage manager. There are three regular stage managers, Harry Clark, Paul Phillips and Maxine S. Taylor. It will be surprising if they do not lose weight during the summer run of so "busy" a show. Blackouts, fades, props, the sheer logistics of getting on and off stage operate on split-second timing. An apology was made before the premiere that certain details were not yet perfected. Without these being identified a reviewer would suppose that the "Get Out And Get Under" automobile of 1913 vintage would hereafter not necessarily be pushed and pulled.

The stage is vast indeed, the extensions to left and right being vaguely reminiscent of Radio City Music Hall. The central action centers in an unevenly contoured proscenium arch, if that term is justified. Side panels are used for head ovals. The apron thrusts well out to include and surround the orchestra pit, thereby creating a runway.

Included in the production are turntables, circular transparent scrims rigged to rise and fall with the light cues. A mirror curtain with an optical illusion front is introduced ahead and repeated for the finale, a la Casino de Paris in the city of the same name.

Peter Wolf designed the scenery, built by Mayflower. Jean Rosenthal created the lighting, using gear from Altman. The costumes attract attention and interest throughout. They are the work of Freddy Wittop with Brooks-Van Horn in on the execution. Striking, too, are the elaborate uses of costly wigs. As for the Ziegfeld Parade down the grand staircase, who has seen that sort of thing in this generation? It has the appeal and the amusement of the remembered sex hokum of another time.

From the printed program credits alone it is impossible to administer justice to so large a complement of backstage talent. Ted Cappy and Stuart Hodes helped with the choreography and Sammy Lambert was production coordinator.

The probable major credit, starting with their wisdom in hiring expertise, goes to Angus G. Wynne Jr. of Texas. He and Compass Fair Inc. "present" the show, with a cousin, Gordon R. Wynne Jr. also in the picture.

Stage and the rim of the pit are decorated with microphones, at least 30 of them. Acoustically, everything seemed in fairly good order for so large a music hall.

A couple of interesting details belong in the present record: (1) there is a Negro girl usher on the centre aisle and about half a dozen non-Caucasians in the cast and (2) the private boxes to the rear have been rented to large corporations at $25,000 each for the season.

Sheila Smith displays authority and singing style in "Over There," the George M. Cohan evocation on the runway. Richard Tene had earlier done Cohan, with professional competence if not very much resemblance to the original. In handling the Negro talent, the producers have been generous but they stopped short of avoidance of the racial sterotype in costume. However, only students of the superiority-inferiority subtleties of our American culture, circa 1964, will notice.

There is, finally, no way satisfactorily to sort out impressions from so big and fast, and group-oriented, an entertainment. All principals come under the parasol of praise. To wit: Singers: Howard Hartman, Gloria LeRoy, Jimmy Randolph, Stewart Rose, Eileen Schauler, Sheila Smith, Richard Tone and Dancers: Jean Deeks, Dorothy Frank, John Harmon, Eddie Roll.

The basic opinion is simply this the Texans have themselves a big, flashy, likeable professionalism-saturated entertainment. Land.

Press-tistics

Some 3,300 newsmen applied for opening day press credentials—2,300 of them from outside New York City.

Over 16,000 special guests received invitations to hear President Johnson speak at Singer Bowl. "Several" thousand didn't show because of rain and threatened stallins.

Plastic covers were provided for still and tv cameras because of the almost constant drizzle.

William J. Donoghue Corp. distributed 7,500 opening day press kits, each weighing approximately three pounds. Of these, 4,800 had been previously mailed, rest were distributed Wed. (22) at the Press Building.

The news services and New York papers have permanent offices in the Press Bldg.

Over 2,750 sandwiches were provided for newsmen by Ballantine Brewery pubrelations director Ed Fisher (plus beer). The Fair publicity staff provided coffee.

Western Union had six press wires operating from Singer Bowl, three from the Press Bldg. Local papers, UP and AP have their own direct wires from the building.

Auxiliary tent put up in back of the Press Bldg. for the opening will be left standing for two weeks to see how many transient U.S. and foreign newsmen show up. It may be needed longer despite the Press Bldg.'s vast phone setup and a briefing room seating several hundred. Pub director Peter J. McDonnell holds twice daily briefings here.

Saul Bass' 'Searching 1-Eye' Spotlights Eastman Kodak's Tiptop Exhibit

Easy to spot because of its tower display of blownup color transparencies, Eastman Kodak's exhibit is an excellent example of instruction made interesting. Almost every type of visual display is to be found in the rambly indoor-outdoor area. Major attraction is Saul Bass' "The Searching Eye," a 15-min. film shown in the Tower Theatre (central section of the exhibit) every half hour. Another 12-min. film, "Quest," is shown in an adjoining smaller theatre, also on the half hour. No admission charge to either.

Scattered about outside are panels, standing displays, slide films, etc. An information centre offers technical assists to camera toters. Of most interest to filmgoers is a 7-min. rear-projected salute to motion pictures which includes clips from upcoming theatrical films and tv series. Currently being plugged are "Unsinkable Molly Brown" and "Beverly Hillbillies." A small collection of stills near this exhibit are excellent photographic examples but a poor cross-section of motion picture history, some also being sans labels. They're as old as the 1917 Theda Bara "Cleopatra" and as recent as last year's "Donovan's Reef."

Emmett Kelly Jr. is a permanent fixture at the Kodak exhibit with duties seemingly to wander about and keep people laughing. He's dressed as his famed clown-father, natch. Best public relations effort by Kodak is the import of 11 male employees from various Kodak outlets throughout the world (two English, two German, two French, one each Austrian, Swiss, Puerto Rican, Colombian and Brazilian). The 11 speak a total of 15 languages. They're easily identifiable, wearing blue raincoats or, later, uniforms, and were collectively the best informed and most diplomatic "greeters" encountered at the opening.

Everything is free at the exhibit. Nothing is for sale, even film. That item, however, is available next door at a concessionaire who has not only film but anything needed to pursue the photography hobby.

Walter's Wax Museum A Good Walk-Through

Wax museums have always had a strange fascination for many. Mme. Tussaud's famed paraffin pageantry is probably one of the longest running permanent shows extant. Its displays are changed periodically to keep up with history and bizarre events of the day.

Although waxeries are not in general vogue in the U.S., the current World's Fair collection provides a gratifying exhibit at $1 and 50c, latter for children. Walter's Wax Museum, located in the Lake Area, is incidentally, the only show in the sector, to give a sampling of its wares. Facing the street are two huge scenes depicting motion picture events with such pop figures as Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr., in a grouping from the Warner Bros. film, "Robin and the Seven Hoods." The other panel is a display from the court of Cleopatra, which is sexy in a refined way.

The walk-through on the inside dwells on history, literature and the arts. There's an excellent display of Presidents, another of humanitarians including Dr. Ralph Bunche, George Washington Carver, David Ben-Gurion, and Dr. Albert Schweitzer. Other subjects include Nimrod & The Hunter Cardinal Richelieu and Anne of Austria, Marie Antoinette, the court of Napoleon III, Chopin and George Sand, Death of Atalia, Sad Legend of Cyparisse, Daniel in the Lion's Den.

The religious panels include Joan of Arc at the Stake, Moses, Madonna and Child, The Last Supper, which is an excellent reproduction of the Da Vinci masterpiece; Popes John XXIII, and Paul VI with Cardinal Spellman; the death of Da Vinci. There's also a panel of Da Vinci painting the Mona Lisa, and what's a wax museum without the ride of Lady Godiva. There are also current tv personalities, film favorites and film monsters.

There's a lot of history and a lot of art represented in this brief walk into the past. It also did well at the Seattle Expo in 1962. Jose.

day (22), is also a record of man's failures. Man's inability to live with himself as well as his inability to control the weather combined to give the Fair less than an auspicious premiere. The initial day resulted in 92,000 admissions, as against the anticipated 250,000.

The N. Y. expo is the most expensive show in history. The top business firms, religious institutions, as well as various nations, states and cities put forth some of their best efforts to create an atmosphere of goodwill.

Probably the most expensive exhibit is that of General Motors which poured in $51,000,000. DuPont spent about $10,000,000. The Ford Show is estimated to cost around $30,000,000. The United States Pavalion appropriation was about $17,000,000.

What's more, virtually every budget didn't last to completion. Workers stalling for that lush overtime loot as deadlines neared is generally suspected but nobody can prove it. This is one item that kept budgets out of focus, and of course, a surplus of bad weather when no work could be done also caused costs to be stratospheric.

But no matter, the opening indicates that much of it was worth it, according to the general consensus.

Lake Area In Siberia?

However, there are some serious clouds on the horizon, as far as some components of the Fair is concerned. The major concern for show biz is the cluster of exhibitors in the Lake Amusement Area, which lags behind the general readiness average of the rest of the expo. The major shows were not complete on opening day. Showmen without the huge resources of the industrial giants have to use a different set of logistics to make the grade. Most can't afford the staggering overtime, the power failures, and the overall inability to go along with the precision most showmen require.

There are even more serious matters for the Lakesters. The area itself is in virtual isolation from the rest of the Fair. It's a long walk from most gates to the amusement area. The cost of putting on the various shows, plus amortizing the vast expenditures of the theatres housing them, will require admission prices far above the scale outside the gates. These layouts will hit their greatest prosperity after most families have seen all else. Many will have to wait until the lines in the free shows are so long that they'll flock to those costing money, if only to get off the concrete.

What's more, unlike most Fairs in history, there is a lot that's missing. Not a single contribution to atmosphere—few girls and very little of the normal colorations of the midway to induce the customer out of the international, Federal, state and industrial areas.

The location of the Lake Area was dictated, apparently, by the Amphitheatre built originally for Billy Rose's Aquacade of World's Fair I, which was the only real moneymaker of that period. The same site now houses the layout of Meyer Davis & Leon Leonidoff called "Wonder World," which will open shortly.

The first Fair was somewhat smaller or appeared to be so because there were lots of lead-ins to that part of the acreage. The fair was dotted with girlie displays which didn't make money but were a lot of fun. Above all, it was an overall good shill.

Food Costs

Every fair, of course, has its money problems. It's inevitable. The season is short and the expenses are many. The huge markups are discernible chiefly in the eating situation. Luncheon at the Top of the Fair for two plus a drink and tip average around $20. The Brass Rail will provide chicken in a basket, dessert and coffee for $2.75. The Schaefer luncheon is $2.95 and all the beer you can drink. Sun Luck's bottom entree in the Hong Kong Pavilion runs at $2, and it's anticipated they'll sell a lot of chowmein at that price.

There are some lowcost eateries including Tad's Steak House where the prevailing tariff is $1.19 for a steak meal. Chun King advertises a 99c Chinese dinner, obviously keyed to future consumer volume. There will be plenty of spots for snacks at standup bars. But once a family decides to sit down, costs begin to soar, unless they can get in on the few low-priced eateries on the grounds.

A family of four will spend approximately $25 per diem including $2 adult admissions and $1 for children.

But after the $2 and food and internal transportation, this mythical family can roam through a wealth of exhibits of which 75% are free. What's more these free shows are figured to get most of the probable 100,000,000 visitors that this big show will attract. The showmen of the Lake area have quite a problem which will take a lot of ingenuity to overcome.

The possibility of a "stall-in" by the Congress of Racial Equality, plus demonstrations by that group, clouded the preem. CORE's efforts to create a stoppage were successful only at the Ford Pavilion which closed at 3 p.m. after demonstrators blocked the entrance to the escalators leading to their main exhibit. The auto maker closed down rather than create further incidents.

The prison pens for mass offenders, during the CORE contretemps, was dubbed Camp Pinkerton, named for the private police force on the Fairgrounds. One COREite wheezed, "First time I had to pay $2 to get arrested." This referred to the admission fees all the civil rights demonstrators paid to get in.

The then & now harkerbackers can't recall any of the nationalistic pavilions charging admissions to their cultural shows, as some do now. Ditto none of the industrials charged but Pepsi has a 60-90c tariff for its Walt Disney ride but few complain because it all goes to UNICEF.

Fair prexy Robert Moses edicted another Biblical pronunciamento, "They shall not pass," even including many of the city fathers, such as the municipal fete which Mayor Wagner is sparking. It's widely ballyhooed that they'll have to lay that two bucks on the line.

Why Didn't Fair Defer Preem?

the big shows in the Lake Amusement Area, say that the Fair should have provided for a postponment. They cite the fact that there was not only a surplus of days in which no construction could proceed, but other items such as the tug strike of the past winter, and the constant tiffing between unions and exhibitors, all of which made it virtually impossible for many to complete their structures.

These exhibs are especially bitter in view of the fact that an A-okay condition on the April 22 D-day would have given them the impetus of a tremendous word-of-mouth which they now feel is lost to them. They say that they could have had the advantage of the tremendous coverage by the world-wide press.

Among the major shows of the Lake Area, "Wonder World" will preem May 2. Mike Todd Jr.'s "modern" minstrel show, "America, Be Seated," will start at the still unfinished Louisiana Pavilion May 15. The Belgian Pavilion needs at least a month to get open. The Hawaiian Village had a dress rehearsal on the Fair's opening day to which it let the public in for free. Ringling Continental Circus needs lotsa work before it can preem.

Dick Button who, with Paul Feigay, is producer of "Ice Travaganza," remarked bitterly on the opening day of the Fair when they gave two shows (incomplete) that they were in the condition they should have been in a week before had they been able to get into the building.

Power failures also dotted the path of travail for the exhibitors. An 18-hour blackout caused tremendous losses of both money and time to the showmen of stage, industry and various countries.

Electronic Snafus

Needing considerably more time than allotted them were layouts in which electronic gadgets were the focal points. Not ready for preview or openers were the Electric Light & Power Show and the Illinois State Pavilion in which an electronically controlled figure of Abraham Lincoln, created by Walt Disney, is the central piece. At press time, engineers were still attempting to synchronize the Emancipator with the IBM computor which controls its voice and movements.

The EP&L exhibit got into shape and opened Saturday (25).

But more than that—many are loudly beefing at the costs of getting ready. One showmen doesn't know what to do. He said that it would cost him $8,000 to have lights strung into a dressingroom. It would cost him $160 for four engineers to turn on the heat on any evening when there's a chill in the air. During the planning stages, one potential exhibitor walked out of the setup because of the likelihood that would cost $8 to change an electric bulb. Since then, he feels that he underestimated the cost of that job.

One bitterly complained, "These prices may be okay for General Motors and Ford, but we can't take it." Some feel that their road to bankruptcy will be lined with prosperous artisans.

One exhibitor stated that they could have plotted alternate courses had they been given additional time by the fair. But deadlines made that impossible.

International Fair

excellent taste, fully operative. Opens upon a garden with stone tables where tourists quench their thirst or satisfy their curiosity with Irish Stout and other Gaelic inventions.

India: On the Fair's map, next door to Ireland. A remarkably varied array of folk and industrial wares, upstairs and downstairs. Hindu girls in saris. Americans must be struck by India's progress in heavy gear. India cafe was operating first day but overtaxed by hungry and impatient Yanks. Fatigue and confusion was haunting the staff by 2:30. Service was good-intentioned but buck-passing to the point of exasperation.

Indonesia: This is Sukarno's stunning synopsis of his nation made over from the Dutch. Exotic. Dainty females trained to think well of men. Escalator rises to dining room and separate bar. Large capacity and long wait for tables. Natives dispense their own kind of music. Maitres at the reservation desk were Americans in tails.

Hong Kong: Downstairs for mercantile concessionaires including one incongruous non-Oriental name, Barrett's of Cape Cod. Upstairs a booming restaurant and bar. Motif imaginatively native, with rickshaws and junks in miniature.

Philippines: Well situated, attractive pavilion with nostaglic recall of MacArthur.

Thailand: Pagoda-like architecture. One of the sights sure to draw crowds. Open.

Caribbean Pavilion: Creamy commercial location and come-on. Ethnically as synthetic as a cruise port boite. Brassy music, $1.60 drinks, dead-slow to imaginary table service for food. Throngs gather outside just to watch.

Taiwan: It's coming along tardily.

Swiss Sky Ride: Cable cars seating four cross the international zone. Five minutes, 75c. A probable bonanza.

Greece: Sign posted—open at 5 p.m.

Venezuela: No signs (of life).

Central America & Panama: Ditto.

Spain: Readying.

Mexico: Manana.

Other Nations: Unreported on account of this reporter's fatigue.

Al Taxin Takes Over VIP-Madison Club, N.Y.

The VIP-Madison Club, N.Y., has been taken over by Al Taxin. Room which is now operating on a lounge policy, recently had fullscale floor shows with The Three Suns in the top spot. Taxin is mulling a resumption of floorshows.

Before acquiring the VIP-Madison, Taxin had been managing director for the Lido Country Club, Long Beach, L.I., and was talent buyer and manager of Unity House, Forest Park, Pa.

Peace Breaks Out in connection with filmmaking, leaving 52's electricians to just manning the lighting equipment itself.

The IATSE local insisted that the Fair was no different from any other circumstance and that it was the rightful handler of electrical matters involving filming and that, in fact, its knowledge of the specialized requirements of electrical work for pix necessitated 52's handling such jobs. According to the settlement, both units will work as they do regularly, with 3 supplying power to the hookup and 52 carrying on from there, laying its own cable and such.

The situation had been a serious one, with neither side eager to budge. 52 didn't see anything different between filming at the Fair and anywhere else and 3 wanted to keep as many men working at the exposition as possible. With much of the actual contract work completed, the Brotherhood has mostly maintainance left to it now.

Local 3 had also been involved in another jurisdictional dispute which has been settled This involved IA projectionists Local 306. In this case, 3 felt that it could and should handle some of the projection of effects and such at the various exhibits. As with 52, local 306 clung to its contention that projection was its job and 3 had no business being involved, just as on the outside. That's how it wound up after some wrangling.

There are still some labor problems at the Fair involving carpenters and theatrical teamsters vs. regular haulers. But the electrical situations were considered major disputes with possibly dangerous effects on work at the Fair itself and related activities. The other differences are mild and scattered by comparison.

Hollywood USA

simulated shooting setup such as was planned and later scrapped due to lack of space. This would give patrons paying the hefty tariff more of a Hollywood feeling than simply the empty sets and museum items. There's not a camera or light in sight and some of the sets, while interesting at a glance, don't rate the high-priced billing.

'Celebrity Room'

Adjoining the Hollywood spot is a "Celebrity Room," to which customers can get from the street or from the exhibit. This cocktail lounge has a seating capacity for 250 at tables and a large, circular bar, in the centre of which is a bandstand for a combo. It will be open from 12 noon to 2 a.m., seven days a week with a continuous entertainment policy. Food and drinks will be served, the latter at $1.25 and $1.50 a belt. Carrying the show biz motif through, caricatures of celebs are hung on the walls. Although not completely finished, the room did open for business late in the afternoon of the Fair's preem.

In an entirely different area, off the Fairgrounds in fact, Hollywood has other representation via the replica of H.M.S. Bounty used in the filming Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty." It is some distance from the Fair itself and the route to it is poorly marked. It isn't even on the Fair map and the only reference to it are some posters which say where it is but not how to get there.

Charge is 90c for adults and 50c for kids. The visitor wanders both above and below decks and the ship has been fitted out with trappings to keep it realistic in its period. No sign of modernity is visible. Polynesian huts adorn the area, one a ticket booth and another a souvenir shop. The Bounty has been drawing considerable patronage but Fairgoers will find it quite a trek, if they can find it at all.

Yesterday (Tues.) a Pitcairn Island Day was staged at the site, commemorating the 175th anni of the famous mutiny. A Pitcairn Island exhibit was opened at that time, featuring a display of items from the place, not for sale to the public.

RCA

which makes for slow-going, a fact which on opening day fetched a smattering of gripe, but this is an unavoidable hazard and can probably be discounted as a pubrelations setback.

Behind this "Operation Tint" is a $150,000,000 investment by RCA in color as the wave of the future and the Flushing pavilion is designed for maximum trailerizing impact on the consumer. And when the folks decide to buy, if they opt for an RCA model, so much the better.

Day-to-day, the color studio is to be graced by celebs doing the interview bit for the closed-circuit network which on premiere day was only partly operational. When in full swing, the network will comprise some 350 installations covering almost all exhibits with a succession of "vignette" programming — live, film, animation, geared to interviews and touting the various displays and products, and with a supplemental function of beaming lost kids to all corners of the Fair.

The c-c web is, to be sure, geared for such "specials" as President Johnson's teeoff address.

Those personality interviews are expected to fasten extended interest within the pavilion and thus aggravate the traffic problem. This is the pre-admitted worry for the RCA crew on hand, and once some experience is under the belt a solution may be forthcoming. Meanwhile, it's watch-and-note.

Cocoanut Grove, L.A.

Los Angeles, April 20.

Tony Bennett, Freddy Martin Orch featuring Eddie Bergman Strings, Ralph Sharon Trio; $3.50 cover plus $3 minimum.

Tony Bennett was nervous in the opening minutes of his first local nitery engagement in five years. But the pro polish, his knowledgeable way with lyrics and a better singing voice than he's shown in years soon put him at ease. He moved on to rightfully gain one of the best accolades a big name Hollywood audience has given one performer for some time.

There are 28 songs in Bennett's more than 65-minute turn. It's just a bit too long for a singer who, despite his warmth and genuine appeal, sings most of them essentially the same way.

Bennett is a dramatic ballad singer who sometimes swings but keeps everything on the same smooth level. His show is well designed, includes a few new tunes, touches of his old and newer hits and, in a clever bit of organization, gets his disclick "Heart in San Francisco" out of the way in just the third number out. But he does reprise it as an encore.

Singer still has some vocal problems, and gets slightly off key in slow tunes like "This Is All I Ask." But his phrasing is superb, timing good and he has a way with lyric communication that creates a strong, empathetic mood.

Of new songs, "Quiet Nights" hits a nice mood area and "When Joanna Loved Me" has a pleasant, romantic blend. "I'm Way Ahead of the Game" is sentimental, and ably expresses Bennett's warmth at hitting the top again after a slight fallow period. Belting of "Chicago" (obviously sung to ringsider Judy Garland) and the opening-closing "Moment of Truth" is strong, while he also does a brisk dual arrangement of "One For My Baby-Rules of the Road."

Singer is the whole show and works hard, ably assisted by the Ralph Sharon Trio and, on opening night, the topflight flute of Paul Horn, as well as the Freddy Martin orchestra and the Eddie Bergman strings. Martin's tribute to Duke Ellington is a nice show starter.

Bennett is in through May 10.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, April 22.

Joe E. Lewis (with Austin Mack), Jimmy Blade Orch; $2.50-$3 cover.

The somewhat staid Camellia House will never be quite the same after Joe E. Lewis' debut in the Drake Hotel's classy supper club. Known primarily as a singer's room (although Henny Youngman and Myron Cohen have played there), it seemed to take on a new life with Lewis' tales of vino and venery.

As per his past appearances over the years in other Chi spots, Lewis, opening night audience was studded with Windy City political bigwigs and members of cafe society. It's a virtual certainty that the room will play host to some of its biggest spenders in the next three weeks.

The Lewis engagement represents Drake veepee Ben Marshall's biggest booking coup to date and is another step in making this room one of the liveliest show spots in town. There are implications of intrigue in the fact that Lewis usually plays the Palmer House, but insiders opine that he was sold on the idea that the Camellia House was less of a "family" room than the Empire Room and also that Marshall simply met Lewis' Palmer House price.

Lewis continues as a matchless raconteur, wit par excellent and nonpareil appreciator of the speedy furlong, fast femmes and the quick buck. He's also a lightning-quick improviser as he demonstrated in his opening line in re the two mirrored posts near the center of the room: "I think that Harry Thaw shot the wrong architect." There were a few puzzled looks, but for the most part "Lewis' people" didn't have to be told about Stanford White and Evelyn Nesbitt.

Aside from a few set pieces, Lewis' turn is mostly fresh and new. The subjects are the same—booze, politics and broads—but he always comes up with new slants, including several new and clever song parodies.

If Lewis is to be faulted at all for his preem night show it is that he devoted an inordinate amount of his hour-long turn to blue material. It's a comedic vein that's been mined pretty thoroughly by other monologists and not worthy of that much attention. Mor.

Crescendo, L.A.

Los Angeles, April 21.

Henny Youngman, Mary Ford, Frankie Fanelli; $2.50 cover plus two-drink minimum.

Three totally different acts are in Shelly Davis' current bill. They range from the specialty humor of Henny Youngman to the folksy homespun tunes of Mary Ford and the Italian flavored belting vocals of Frankie Fanelli.

Fanelli, newest to local audiences, may come off best. Youngster has a strong, lyric voice, sells hard and give a polished performance. He looks like a comer.

Singer works hard, does most of his tunes in a fast-paced rhythm style but basically employs a straight, hard delivery. Using his own quartet, augmented with members of the Bob Armstrong band, Fanelli runs through Italian romance tunes but also does a soft ballad like "This is All I Ask." He's dramatic and sometimes dynamic, but has a tendency to overdo the emotional projection.

Youngman is a master of the oneliner. His Miami and nudist colony bits are particularly good. He's standard and solid for most audiences, although just a little quiet for the swingers.

Miss Ford, in her first local appearance as a single since breaking up with Les Paul, doesn't have the same impact the two had when they were paired. But she tries for the same multi-voice electronic sound by using her sister, Carol, seated at the piano and duplicating her voice.

It's a good gimmick and works well on the famed Ford-Paul "World Waiting For A Sunrise" and "Alabamy Bound." But, alone, Miss Ford shows vocal limitations. Tunes are quiet and without real punch. She has considerable aid from brother Bob Simmons, whose dexterity on the guitar is an asset.

Show runs through May 1.

Crazy Horse Cafe, N. Y.

Theodore; Sheila Jordon; The Jack Riley Trio; The Johnny Boggen Quartet; $2 admission.

Its name is the only thing that this avant-garde Bleecker Street coffee house has borrowed from the better-known Parisian nitery. During most of the week owner Frank Dalia depends on musical groups for entertainment, but on Friday-Saturday has started policy of an augmented bill. Admission ordinarily varies between $1.50-2.50 depending on cost and appeal of a particular bill. This one, which started Friday (17) for indefinite stay, goes for straight $2.00.

Theodore, an Austrian, has built up a reputation of sorts over the years with his mixture of macabre and satiric byplay. The impression, this time out, is that he has become the complete cynic. There's nothing light and frothy in his remarks although quite a few of them come out very funny. His total cynicism is aimed first at himself, then at the rest of the world.

Theodore's discussions, broadsides and harangues are delivered in a thundering voice and an insulting manner. He attempts to rub some of the Pangloss off this worst of all possible whirls. Nothing escapes his censure and he doesn't hesitate to flay the occasional innocent who tries to cross swords with him. His pet subject currently is food—he's against it.

Blues singer Sheila Jordan, who shares the bill weekends and headlines it rest of the week, is a mixture of personal talent and professional limitations. She has considerable feeling and style for blues but her voice betrays her when, too often, she lets it wander away from her range. Although she can sustain a low note beautifully, anything in a medium or high range makes her voice shake like a rattling window blind and take on an unpleasant nasal quality.

Her best bits are a far-out "Am I Blue" (the melody never enters into it) and her closer, Milt Jackson's scattish "Bags Groove." She's supported beautifully by the Jack Riley Trio whenever they find her singing in the same key she has requested. Two shows nightly with the house band, Johnny Boggen's Quartet, filling before-between and after show periods. Robe.

McGuire Sis' Swinging B.O. At the Persian Room Keys Fair's Nitery Hypo

The singing McGuire Sisters were really swinging at the box-office on the night caught and, if last week's general class boite biz is any criterion, it looks like the dubiousness about what the N.Y. World's Fair may or may not mean to saloon trade must be revised affirmatively.

Between the ANPA (publishers) convention and the earlybird Fair influx (tycoons, exhibitors, industrialists et al.) spots like "21" were overboard on trade. Same was true at the Plaza's Persian Room. Maitre d'hotel John Fosatti was almost baffled by the sudden embarrassment of riches, particularly the supper shows, heretofore notoriously in the light side.

Hotel Plaza, N.Y.

McGuire Sisters (3) with Tony Riposo conducting; Emil Coleman and Mark Monte Orchs; $3-$4 cover.

Whether a tribute to the souers or the boom in tourism, the McGuires augur a boffo four weeks. There was no gainsaying their audience identification because their tv and other trademarked songs and bits received customer recognition on vamp-in.

The personable Christine, Phyllis and Dorothy look collectively and individually attractive as they mix up their own rhythmic arrangements of standards and specials (written and staged by Murray Kane) with skillfull special batoning assist of Tony Riposo, their own pianist-conductor. The regular Emil Coleman orchestra is fortified by extra strings for "I Love A Violin" and general musical backstopping.

The sisters pivot around the middle (albeit youngest) sister Phyllis who gets the lone solo opportunities with "My Ideal," including nice impressions of Garland, Clooney, Kitt, Merman and Satchmo.

From sign-on with "Bewitched" to their signature signoff "May You Always" there is consistent empathy with the audience. They mix up "Miss You Tonight," "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Baby Come Home," "Things To You Are" with novelties like the above impressionistic medley, "Daddy," "Wicked Stage" and "Sisters," a midriff number, which is their settling-downer until they take off anew. They are attractively gowned in uniform sheaths, and make one costume change, also ok.

Besides the dansapation-compelling Colemanites, the standard Mark Monte Trio whips up a storm of tempos in the relief sessions.

Manne Hole, L.A.

Los Angeles, April 24.

Louis Bellson Band (15); $2 cover weeknights, $2.50 weekends; one-drink minimum.

Louis Bellson manages (barely) to squeeze himself and 13 of 14 sidemen onto the stage in this small jazz boite (they lowered Frank Strazzieri's 88 from platform to floor), and immediately makes Shelly Manne's first big band booking a success.

Only physical problem is fact that trombones (3) are forced to stand off toward wings, beyond edge of the backdrop, thus rendering them almost inaudible during solos. Problem can be resolved easily by having bone man walk to center stage before attempting to blast out alone.

However, overall sound is excellent, with Bellson himself furnishing most of the luster throughout. Aside from his simultaneous pedalling of twin basses, there's a new addition to his bag of tricks—sticks with rattles attached. He switches to them briefly during torrid closer, "Tempo Di Tamburi," in which he wails for a solid 15 minutes.

Standout soloists are alto saxist Joe Maini, trumpeters Jimmy Zito and Freddy Hill, with bassist Morty Corb and 88er Strazzieri amply abetting Bellson in the rhythmnastics.

Troupe is in through May 3.

Basin St. East, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

Pat Collins seems to be doing extremely well at this Ralph Watkins hospice. The femme hypnotist is being held over as the Treniers start an engagement at this spot replacing the comedics of Joe & Eddie.

The Treniers, coming in as an octet, are one of the by-now standard musical acts on the circuits. The family has dwindled somewhat since they started, but there are at least three members of this troupe who look like they're related. Even if not all are relatives, they seem cohesive enough to work as a family unit.

The Treniers are a bouncy and vigorous act who are strong enough to warrant a focal spot in most lounges. Indeed, they did a term at one of the Vegas lounges before hitting Basin St. They have a sax, drum and piano as their musical backing, and all sing well enough to be generally entertaining.

However, it appears that this particular spot isn't their proper metier. The Basin Streeters are generally a spohisticated lot who are hep to current modes in entertainment. The Treniers are a bit too elementary to suit this taste despite their hard work. There's a lot of basic stuff in their comedy and music and there's no new thinking to interest the bulk of this house's patrons.

Miss Collins works with top expertise in getting an assortment of subjects under hypnosis. She prevails upon them to do a lot of things they wouldn't ordinarily do in public. Some of the subjects coming from the audience do her bidding with the avidity of accomplices. She entertains for a complete hour. Jose.

Cave, Vancouver

Vancouver B.C., April 24.

Mickey Rooney, Bobby Van, Dodie Stevens, Dancing Debs (5), Fraser Macpherson Orch (9); $2.50 admission.

What Mickey Rooney's act for his Cave debut lacks in current comedic cerebralogy it more than makes up for in straight entertainment values. Rooney needs no apology for not being of the nitery hip school.

His craft is compounded of his years of experience as a gifted screen performer and his uncanny ability to extract maximum mileage from his visual drolleries. Comedy, with its essence of pathos and buffoonery, is his forte. Bobby Van, a classy song-and-dance man in his own right, offers knowing support as Rooney's straight man.

Van opens with a pleasing vocal, "I'm Shooting High," before Rooney's riotous entrance from the audience as a snow happy Swedish ski champ. The way Rooney kids his own screen image and the slick switch he uses to return on stage as himself get the act off to a flying start. From here on the pair is way out in front and romp home easy winners in the laugh parade.

Bill opener is Dodie Stevens, an 18-year old Chicago songstress. Pert and petite, she has lotsa poise for one so young on the nitery circuit but had a disclick a few seasons back with "Pink Shoelaces." She sings this and six other songs of surprisingly varied range, best entry being her strong closer, "With These Hands." Arrangements tend to be a shade over-orchestrated but no fault of Fraser Macpherson orch which offers good backing Shaw.

Berns Rest., Stockholm

Stockholm, April 21.

Oscar Brown Jr. with Floyd Morris at piano, Les Sexy Girls de Stefani & Andre, Mario Weber Orch; $3 minimum.

American singer Oscar Brown Jr., who's making his nitery debut in Sweden at Berns Restaurant, scores easily with a songbag that "Hazel," among others. He also includes "Forbidden Fruit" and wins top audience reaction with "Mr. Kicks" and "New Born Child."

Although this is Brown's first visit to Sweden, he's not an unknown here for he hosted "Jazz Scene USA" which was a popular serial when recently aired via Swedish TV. Show helped make his name familiar among Swedes.

Rounding out the bill, which is in until May 15, is a French ballet tagged Les Sexy Girls de Stefani & Andre. Troupe has talented lurpers but they're onstage for only one dance routine. Unit would benefit through more show time. Mario Weber's orch supplies brisk dansapation. Wing.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 22.

Jerry Lewis, Four Step Bros., Harry Nofal, Copa Girls (12); produced and staged by Jack Entratter; choreography, Renne Stuart; stage direction by Harold Dobrow; $5 minimum.

Jerry Lewis starts his latest Sandsession with a discussion of his tv fiasco (he did things he couldn't do, according to the sponsors, and although most of the mail came from St. Louis, nobody watched the show there, according to the ratings) and piles up the yocks.

Lewis, a potent member of Jack Entratter's stable, had first-nighters with him while reviving some of his best bits and introducing some freshies. Outstanding among latter is an effective duet he does with a taped Mel Torme, and a charming "Thank Heaven For Little Girls" song and dance number he contribs after telling of his six sons—he's joined by two beguiling dancing dolls who can't be more than six or seven years old.

Lou Brown at the 88 conducts the Antonio Morelli orch (32) and Lewis' drummer, Bill Richmond, is aboard.

The Four Step Bros., probably the most imitated terp team in the biz, balances bill. The dancers blend comedy into their fast routines, and pull heavy applause with their famed "Beat" bowoff.

Holdover Renne Stuart production featuring fine baritone Harry Nofal and the dozen Copa lovelies, is the curtain-raiser.

Alan King returns here May 13.

Duke.

Nugget, Sparks

Sparks, Nev., April 23.

Sergio Franchi, Myron Cohen, George Arnold Singers & Dancers (17), Foster Edwards Orch (12); $2 minimum second show.

Sergio Franchi's masterful way with a song and Myron Cohen's masterful way with a story is assurance of class entertainment for this two-week stanza at John Ascuaga's Nugget. It's a repeat date in the Circus Room for Franchi, a debut for Cohen. Either name on the marquee portends boffo b.o., but both together makes a sure bet for full houses.

Since Franchi's first outing here last summer he's polished his stage demeanor, learned to work in a more relaxed style, and displays more savvy in communication. He's pro all the way and sells his wares with full authority. Unerring on the vocalistics—in any range—he has smartly paced his catalog to cover all areas.

Be it with only piano accomp or backed by the rich arrangements played by Foster Edwards' well-rehearsed music men, Franchi showcases a remarkable talent. Tenor's big full tones—at times emotion packed—give new interpretations to such numbers as "Tell Her That I Love Her," "Marta," "Non Dimenticar," "Maria" (done with self-accomp guitar only) and "I Wish You Love."

Big exit is "Al Di La," which wins attention normally reserved for a concert hall. Singer's rugged good looks enhances his appeal with both genders. There's just enough humor in the act to bridge the vocal offerings, and for added diversity he throws in a bit of terping. On some titles he goes bilingual with Italian lyrics. Franchi exudes a magnetism, coupled with the powerful voice, that makes him a natural for any situation.

Cohen, always in great form, hasn't played this area for about five years, and audience response indicates he's been missed. As a storyteller he's in a class alone; ditto for his material. Accenting his humor with studied physiognomy and a sometimes drooping eyelids, he wins continuing and sustained yocks as he covers such diversified areas as nudism, African safaris, suburbia, femme habits, psychiatry and religion. As a dialectician he's the master, particularly with the Yiddish yarns.

His stories reflect human nature, are held to the common level, touch on the mores of various ethnic groups. Some are familiar, but with Cohen's way of telling they lose none of the risibility values. Tabler reaction strongly suggests Cohen's dates in the Reno-Tahoe area shouldn't be so infrequent. His local following is big and loyal.

Pearl Bailey, Enzo Stuarti dotted for May 7. Long.

Americana, N. Y.

Peggy Lee; Jack Del Rio Combo (6); Richard Foster; Lee Evans orchestra (16). Cover, $5-$6.

When you put 21 musicians into a low-ceilinged room like the Hotel Americana's Royal Box the result isn't music, it's noise. The five musicians who regularly work with singer Peggy Lee plus the 16-piece Lee Evans house band turned its full decibels on for the overture Monday (27) and it must have been heard at the Fair. Fortunately, Miss Lee chose to stick to her own group with occasional boosts from various small segments of the Evans' aggregation for most of her musical underscoring.

Miss Lee is a canary who can warble with the best of them and this has long been musical history. She's a mistress of rhythm and a 100% professional. That means, of course, that when some of her selections aren't really worth it, she still gives them the same amount of heart she does her familiar standbys. Some of her elaborate arrangements, which would be better suited to a concert-type presentation, sound a bit tricky in this dinery-winery, such as her complicated variation on "Make Believe," but there are enough straightforward and sincerely sung offerings to please the most demanding Lee fan.

For her opening show Monday (27), she was over generous, some 20-plus numbers taking the show past 11 p.m. She'll undoubtedly be more conservative during the rest of her 4-week engagement. Husband Jack Del Rio conducts with aplomb. Lee Evans takes over the house group for dancing.

Although most of her offerings are comparatively new, Miss Lee sprinkled the bill with several items with which she is identified —"Manana," "Why Don't You Do Right?" (but no longer a la Benny Goodman) and "Fever." Bowing to the demands of restless residents she included plenty of fast rhythm and jump tunes but, as always, she comes on strongest with a hush-abye ballad. Some of the faithful would have welcomed a bit more blues.

During a "clown" set, she is joined onstage by son-in-law Richard Foster, whose sad-faced clown makeup and limited mime bit in the cramped space added nothing and could well be dropped—or give him more room to operate. For the sake of pace and impatient customers, Miss Lee would be wise to cut the between-songs chatter to a minimum. She's not good at it.

New Frontier, L.V.

Las Vegas, April 22.

"Voila! Les Femmes!" starring Nelida; with Dick Weston, Pierce & Dante, Nick Navarro, Lobato Dancers (10), Nudes (8), George Hernandez Orch (11); produced and directed by Bill Turner and Alan Smith; choreography, Eber Lobato; lighting, Danny Stadtlander, $5 minimum.

The new nudie revue in the Venus Room, produced by Bill Turner and Alan Smith, had more than its share of opening night technical boo-boos. A few nights of sharpening should clear up the curtain, lighting, and elevator stage flaws, and "Viola! Les Femmes!" could develop into a crowd magnet.

The title is misleading in that it's not a French show in the tradition of the others in Las Vegas, but at least it hints to those interested that there are nudes on deck —in this case eight, and all of them luscious. The 10 girl dancers are also lookers, and highly talented in the terp department, guided with finesse by choreographer Eber Lobato. Dance patterns are colorful, exciting, and spearheaded by the show's star Nelida, who is exceptionally beautiful in face and figure.

Comedy, often missing in productions such as this, is present in just the right proportion. Ventriloquist Dick Weston, technically one of the best voice-tossers and visually funny with his "Aunt Martha" and "Clarence" assistants, also has audience-pleasing dialog.

Additional laughs come from team of Pierce & Dante, in one marionette skit consisting of several scenes, and another where they appear as surgeon and nurse with a Frankenstein monster-type patient who winds up mouthing Louis Armstrong's "Hello, Dolly!"

Nick Navarro scores handliy in his dance numbers with Nelida, and dance deviser Lobato also clicks as a performer during an authentic Gaucho romp. Singer-dancer Mary Demos is an attractive asset as leader of the pulchritude parade. The original music is pleasantly appropriate. It was composed, arranged, and is directed by George Hernandez with his 11-piece orch. The costumes, both provocative and tasteful, are by Madame Germaine.

"Viola! Les Femmes!" is booked for indefinite run.

Ye Little Club, L.A.

Los Angeles, April 22.

Mike Dees, Ondine, two-drink minimum.

In ornithological circles singer Mike Dees might be classified as a head-bobbing finger snapper, a species with which the woods abound. Yet this 22-year-old belter from Houston has vocal equipment considerably better than many of his thin-voiced, merely hip contemporaries and he may prosper on this basis.

Dees, making his L.A. nitery bow here, is paired with the wistful, talk-singing femme, Ondine. Bill is in for two weeks. Dees gets maximum value out of such swingers as "Time After Time," "You, the Night and the Music," and "Day In, Day Out." He leans on a lyric with authority.

His voice is eminently masculine and flexible, with something seemingly always in reserve.

Dees sang much of the set caught with a hand mike, most of the time pushing it out of range of his vocal crescendos, though sometimes leaving it a mite close and shaking his audience. In a club this small it might be wise to avoid this. Withal, singer has an infectious sincerity and handles minimal between-songs chatter well.

Ondine browses amiably among "River Seine," "Two Sleepy People" and "When World Was Young," accelerating for "Bill Bailey" and "Bye Bye Black Bird" and hitting her best stride with compelling treatment of "Irma La Douce." She talk-sings in what she calls "Fren-lish" (French-English), gimmick providing a needed peg on which to hang her low-pressure act. Her little-girl kookiness is fine as far as it goes, but she needs something more.

Backing both singers is Jack Smalley on bass and Ron Phillips on piano. They do a first-rate job.

Hawaiian Room, N. Y.

"Gems of the South Pacific," produced and directed by Tony Cabot; with Keola Beamer, Teiko Yanagi, Dennis Regor, Alii Noa, Mapuana, Mapela, Leimomi, Kehau, Healani; Sam Makia Islanders, Phil Wayne Orch; $2 cover.

There are two areas of entertainment at the Hawaiian Room of the Hotel Lexington. One is the show with its South Seas motif and the other is the menu with its Polynesian fare. Restaurant Associates, which operates the room, as well as the Forum, Four Seasons and other posh spots, scores with the delicacies and drinks. The floor entry, produced and directed by Tony Cabot, also fills the bill.

"Gems of the South Pacific" may be somewhat of an overstatement of the presentation, but the show has the necessary ingredients to please the room's clientele. There's a fire dance, hip-weaving by eye-filling wahines, ukulele playing, singing and audience participation in a hula-styled hoedown.

Keola Beamer staged the dances, handles the introes and also does well in the vocal department. His rendition of "Manhattan," with one of the gals giving the number a hula workover, is good.

Dennis Regor displays his uke savvy with such numbers as "Deep Purple" and "Malaguena." Teiko Yanagi, a Japanese lass, makes a comely appearance and exhibits a pleasant voice, winding up her stint nicely with Musetta's Waltz from "La Boheme."

In a more frenzied tempo, there's Alii Noa's twirling of a flaming knife and the rapid-fire swiveling of the dancers in several numbers. The audience participation bit in which those at tables are brought to the floor to join in the shaking has obvious appeal.

The Phil Wayne Orch and the Sam Makia Islanders play for dancing and back the show.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. O.

New Orleans, Apri 24.

Buddy Greco, Brothers Kim (3) Leon Kelner Orch; $2.50 week-night minimum, $4 Sats.

Buddy Greco brings a potent vocal charge to Seymour Weiss' plush Blue Room. He has a rousing way with a tune and scored in his initial outing here Thursday night (23) with a well-planned songalog.

Appearing twice nightly, he not only displays vocal agility but comes up with some peppery piano playing. Most impressive of the Greco repertoire are "Around the World," "Let There Be Love" and "Lady Is A Tramp." Bows off to hefty palm-pounding.

Opening the new layout are the Brothers Kim, male counterparts of the Korean Kim Sisters, who preceded them by a few weeks. Youngsters are accomplished in playing an assortment of instruments, being equally at home with rock and roll and folk tunes, as well as pops and evergreens. They also stand out in a clever gun drill-dance routine.

Leon Kelner's musical crew does its usual topdrawer job in cutting the show and providing the dance music for the ankle bending sessions.

Show runs two weeks until May 5.

Bimbo's 365, S.F.

San Francisco, April 24.

The Vagabonds, "Voila Les Folies of 1964" (36), Rex Castle, Roy Palmer Orch (9); $2-$2.50 cover.

Smooth, relaxed professionalism is the forte of The Vagabonds. The four amiable guys and a doll of a gal singer boff their way through a longish turn (40-50 minutes) without a slow spot. They make it look easy, but the end result is obviously the product of careful rehearsal.

The Italianate influence is big —melodiously, as in a fine "Lazy River." Or wacky, as in the Italian version of "McNamara's Band"—"a little Irish song our fathers taught us when they came from Italy," said Dino Natali, the bass-playing pratfaller, mimic and comic.

The leader, guitar-strumming singer Dominick Germano, provides the careworn foil for Natali, but the entire group kibitzes, with good material, too. Singer Bobbie Boyle, a diminutive dark-haired girl, scores on a richly toned treatment of "I Remember You." She also doubles on the vibes.

Holdovers include the big production numbers, with lead dancer Vicki Durant and singer Evana, and Rex Castle, puppeteer, with his "little people," the little people including a singing puppet and even a stripping puppet. Roy Palmer's nine-man orch provides the backing.

Rusty Draper opens May 3.

Dick.

Trude Heller's, N. Y.

Tyree Glenn Jr., Imperials (5), Harvey Kaye Quintet, Bertha Colbert; $2-$2.50 cover.

Trude Heller's continues to be the Greenwich Village rock'n' roll flagship. Most any night but Monday, and especially on weekends when a two-drink bar minimum prevails, the joint is jammed with stompers, the balance of whom seems to be young New Jersey intellectuals (name any hit disk, they'll tell you what's on the other side) shooting the N. J.-N. Y. age gap to get their kicks in the state where teenagers can juice up as well as dance.

Tyree Glenn Jr., a vet of the precincts, heads the bill in a long stand. Quint continues to grind out the boomchuck loud and clear and echo while getting in a few jazz and ballad licks. In the trend of r&r groups to give the big beat a big sound, the Imperials have whamming drums and wired organ with Tony Bartlett on the former and Steve Shedan on the latter.

New guitar man, Charles Hughes, formerly with the Drifters vocal group, adds a lot of class with some solid rhythm & blues and jazz sounds. He also takes an occasional fine ballad vocal turn with echo effect—holding the last high note long enough to stop the dance floor shakes, which is some trick.

Wayne Bartlett handles the shouting r&r vocals and punches up the beat with tambourine. Glenn is on tenor sax. Group has some good special material, such as the original "Subway Wobble," the first swinging trip uptown on the A train since Duke Ellington.

Harvey Kaye's ofay Quint has a vibrating beat that would shatter the Texas Pavilion at the New York World's Fair. Trude Heller's, however, was built in the days when they made them for keeps, and the walls only hum. This booming effect is created by Kaye on organ and Dave Oliver on fender bass chording together while Tommy Tric booms the drums. Ronald Alland is on sax and emcees and Denny Lenoux is on guitar. All wail together on the r&r vocals.

Bertha Colbert, a Heller institution on the premises more often than not during the last year, takes a vocal turn each set with the Imperials. She combines solid sight values with hip projection and a shouting r&r vocal style that has not lost all traces of the religioso and blues origins.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, April 25.

Molly Bee, Don Ragon Orch (10); $2.50-$3 cover.

Molly Bee's first local date augurs a big fortnight for the plush Empire Room, where the comely songstress bowed Friday (24) before a big crowd sprinkled with oldsters—obviously country & western fans. The pony-tail hairdo and frilly cocktail dress are visual aids as the capable canary satisfies both c&w and pop music aficionados.

Perched on a stool and plucking guitar, Miss Bee quickly gets aud rapport, kidding herself with a twang and offering oatunes, an aud participation "Gotta Travel On" and a tribute to the late Hank Williams with "Your Cheatin' Heart" for lusty palm praise.

Departing the rustic rhythms, she exhibits fine pipes in a straight repertoire, scoring with "Anytime," "Fools Rush In," and "Left My Heart in San Francisco." Ahead all the way, shapely canary adds body English to lyrics of "In Other Words" to build mitting and begs off with a rousing "Strike Up the Band" after a boff 40-minute stint.

Don Ragon's house band gives flawless showbacking, and fills the floor for terp sessions.

Five-Spot, N. Y.

Sonny Rollins Trio, Rolen Kirk Quartet; $3 minimum.

It is sometimes hard to tell if this eastside Greenwich Village home of the hip sounds is featuring a comedy or jazz bill these nights.

Saxman Sonny Rollins, like the Beatles, has a wild hair cut. But, instead of a girlish bob, his is a fierce Mohican strip right down the middle of the scalp. And, like Miles Davis, Rollins these days is given to disappearing from the band stand during a performance and strolling around the cabaret.

But, unlike Davis, Rollins takes his horn along and blows while he strolls. The effect is stunning—in the literal sense of the word. Only occasionally does Rollins' horn wax lyrical in the style he employed when he came back on the scene after a two-year layoff for contemplation.

It is hard to tell when Rollins is being comic and when he's being serious. He blows long instrumentals that sound like some kind of a parody of Ornette Coleman, the plastic sax non-objectivist. Then a standard will start to swing, but wind somewhere in the abstract—with Rollins wandering all the while.

He started one set in a black slouch hat and black coat, blowing away while sitting at an empty table behind the bandstand. A little fun wouldn't hurt any of the grind modern jazz sets played around town, but a little straight playing is in order with Rollins. His driving, bop drummer Roy McCurdy, helps the far out stuff to some degree. Ron Carter is on bass.

Rolen Kirk also likes to clown, but his hip segue sallies are easily identified and actually funny Kirk is blind and apparently lives in a world of sound that he projects through his many instruments with great effectiveness. He plays tenor sax, stritch, flute, nose flute and a number of other off-beat instruments—sometimes three at a time.

But there is much more good jazz music than novelty in his performance. Standouts in a colorful and varied set are "Berkshire Blues," on which Kirk does a fine vocal in musician rather than singer style, and "Hip Chops," which he intros with sharp wit (the hip chops—lips—are his) and which has a brilliant flute-stritch solo.

Bill.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

Patti Page (with Rocky Cole); Meyer Davis Orch conducted by Emery Davis, Horace Diaz Orch; $4-$5 minimum.

Patti Page is an infrequent visitor to New York cafes. It's probable that she has eschewed coming into town until conditions were just right for her. Her bow at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria's Empire Room seemed to come under a set of fortuitous circumstances.

There's lotsa business floating around from World's Fair visitors and the city is jumping with conventions. Perhaps the first manifestations of spring bring on a desire to let the spirits soar. Miss Page seems able to encourage all these urges.

Miss Page has had a distinguished career. Initially a record singer, she has progressed far beyond that area. She articulates feelings, sentiment, power and projection. She recalls a lot of musical history as well as displaying a song style that rarely seems to go out of vogue. She gets her auditors to sit back and relax and let the songs fall where they may.

Miss Page seems to dwell on old as well as latterday tunes. In all these endeavors she voices basic feelings without neglecting people of sophistication. She goes in for hill country tunes, folk and latterday pops. She makes the round of many emotions and touches all bases. Her conductor, Rocky Cole, also chimes in with song to provide an aura of gaiety.

The Meyer Davis Orch conducted by Emory Davis hits the right note in providing a tuneful background. Horace Diaz rolls out the Latin relief. Per usual, Louis Siccardi presides at the tape gracefully.

Golden, Reno

Reno, April 24.

"Flapper Follies" with Elsa & Waldo, Vespia Bros. (2), Vega Maddux, Don Staiton, Golden Girls (10), John Carleton Orch (10); no cover, no minimum.

Barry Ashton has produced many shows at the Golden for bossmen Bill and Jim Tomerlin, and in this edition—tagged "Flapper Follies" —he has another sure winner. The first two shows nightly are always sellouts, the third almost capacity.

Accenting the Roaring 20s, opener is a razzle-dazzle affair with dancers making a shreiking intro from among tablers. From there on it's a swinging session, laced with comedy, song, and dance—and a generous display of the epidermis by the four shapely nudes and the six equally eye-appealing dancers in four production numbers.

Most impressive of the productions is one themed "Bird in a Gilded Cage," with Don Staiton showing his exceptional vocal talents on titles including names of birds as the girls strut in feathered costumes to enhance the theme.

Elsa & Waldo, in featured spot, spoof ballet in slow motion while maintaining perpetual oversized smiles. Two also show inventive legomania that's of their own origin. Act is on the plus side for visual appeal, not only for the terp bits and mugging but for male's skimpy suiting and femme's ruffled panties.

Vespia Bros., familiar from prior outings in this area, have changed the act little. One brother makes intro from audience, dropping tray as partner tries to do a straight operatic aria on stage. Two make with impressive style in vocal tandem, but seldom play it straight all the way. Deletion of the vintage lines and gags, addition of new material would prove a big assist to the act.

Vegas Maddux, showcased in two segments, has the qualities of a natural comedienne. She's big in size, savvy in selling her wares. In first spot, she wears a little-girl-type dress as she gives her own version of "Tiptoe Through the Tulips." She tiptoes at the beginning but by the time the final notes sound she's stomping through the tulips—and throwing them out in front of stage.

Staiton, featured production singer, handles his many vocal chores in pro style with assurance and complete authority. He's at home in any tempo and creditably reflects the Roaring 20s in presentation and enthusiasm.

John Carleton's musicians rate top mention for faithfully following the charts, sometimes intricate and filled with many cues.

New Acts

JESSIE MATTHEWS
Songs
32 Mins.
Society, London

As this is Jessie Matthews' first cabaret engagement for about 32 years, a new act review is in order. At the height of her fame in the '30s she was one of London's brightest musicomedy stars, in regular demand for films and theatres. After the war she spent some years in Australia and recently made a "comeback" as the star in a BBC soaper, "Mrs. Dale's Diary."

Inevitably, her act is loaded with nostalgic values and, frankly, is at its best when she is making her trip down memory lane. The weakest links are a couple of numbers from "My Fair Lady," which she sings adequately enough but which do not match the style and mood of the major part of her routine. She seems to have lost little of her vivacity with the passing of the years though it is, understandably, a middleaged version of the star who captivated West End audiences some three decades back.

During her peak, and even since, Miss Matthews has been a target for the impressionists, and with a shrewd sense of comedy, gives her impression of an impersonator impersonating Jessie Matthews. The first-night audience cheered the opening bars as they recognized each oldie. Among the evergreens in the lineup were "My Heart Stood Still," "Over My Shoulder," "Dancing on the Ceiling," "Room With a View," "Head Over Heels In Love" and "Silver Lining." The SRO audience joined in many of the choruses—even before being invited to do so. Myro.

ALIZA KASHI
Songs
23 Mins.
Club Morocco, Winnipeg

Aliza Kashi, a dark-eyed Israeli thrush is making her first appearance before an English-speaking audience. Despite her lack of exposure she's creating brisk business for Harry Smith's downtown Club Morocco.

Miss Kashi, who speaks nine languages, got her start in Israel, barnstormed Europe and subsequently became a draw in Buenos Aires, where she had her own tv series, and cut some half-dozen records for the Musart, Mocamba and Indica labels. Most recently she's primarily known as "the Nestle girl" in Mexico City circles.

Attractively gowned in a formfitting, black sheath dress, she moves through her turn with considerable authority and vocal control. Opening with "I Will Follow Him," she switches with ease to Italian, Spanish and Hebrew folksongs (she can also hold her own in French, Portugese and Yemini) and accompanies herself more than competently on the guitar.

Her strongest is an emotional "Exodus" (in English) when she displays her powerful voice to best advantage. "Hava Nagila," as the upbeat finale, had the house rocking.

Miss Kashi's major problem consists in her choice of material—the linguistic calisthenics display perception, but the slow-paced "Cielito Lindo" and "Quondo, Quondo" have both overdone in these parts. There would seem to be a better choice of foreign language material to showcase her multilingual talents to prime advantage.

She's doing three shows a night here for a month, and then moves to New York, where she's booked at the Sahbra for six months. Huca.

BARBARA BARRY
Songs
25 Mins.
Monticello, Framingham, Mass.

Barbara Barry is a blonde blue-eyed eyeful with a big belting voice which she used to good advantage in her stint here. Out for a short time in the western Massachusetts area, she projects in slick style handling a nice selection of pop tunes and ballads. Stage presence is stylish and she has rapport with her audience exhibiting winning style and warm personality.

Her big number is "Grace of God," which she builds for big rounds of applause. She looks natural for niteries, tv, musicals. Guy.

TOMI FUJIYAMA
Songs
20 Mins.
Mint, Las Vegas

Making her American debut in the new edition of "Hong Kong Scandals" at The Mint is Tomi Fujiyama, who is a real charmer with her songalog. The dainty, 22-year-old doll has a delicate face of classic Japanese beauty, and her well-balanced repertoire makes her a strong entry for nitery and theatrical dates.

For this gig, Miss Fujiyama wears cowgirl togs, and with an exceptionally pleasant voice offers (in English, learned phonetically) such numbers as "Jambalaya," "Tennessee Waltz," "Back In The Saddle Again," "I Can't Stop Loving You," and of course, "I Left My Heart Where Tony Bennett Left His."

For engagements where Miss Fujiyama is alloted more time, she would be wise to include one or two of the songs she has on Japanese disks—she has 60 bestsellers going for her, which have sold more than 25,000,000 copies to date. Duke.

ADELE CASTLE
Songs
23 Mins.
Duvernay Hotel, Hull, Que.

The new nitery thrushes seem more and more to aim at all styles in one shortish sesh—from belt to tender near-whisper. Some of them achieve it too, and one is Adele Castle who, while sans quit the rich variety of Anita Ortez, is standout nevertheless.

Hoboken-born Miss Castle opened with "Hundreds and Hundreds of Guys," segueing into a knock-'em-cold job on "Peel Me a Grape"—playing up to ringsiders, with her shapely, well-gowned chassis a-wiggle. She's a striking, shorthaired brunet with powerful pipes, who headed the Mello-Larks group till last spring when it broke up.

If she relaxes a little more, Adele Castle may well go far, and should soon be disking. Gard.

JOE GORDON FOLK FOUR Songs, Comedy
10 Mins.
Metropole, Glasgow

Here's a peppy Auld Lang Syne foursome with an act that zips along at a fast pace, and holds a high quota of entertainment potential. Quartet give out with Scot ballads and folk melodies, and garner useful customer reaction.

Leader is Joe Gordon, garbed in tartan jacket and helming his group with confidence and requisite attack. Three of the males, Gordon included, use guitars, and the fourth gives out on drums.

Repertoire is suitably varied, ranging from the breezy opener, "Barnyards o' Delgaty," to the tender "Road and the Miles to Dundee." Joe Gordon himself registers strongly with the comedy number, "Granny Fraser's Flittin', Frae Aboyne tae Aiberdeen," an item which pulls in yocks as well as heavy palming from local outfronters. Touches of comedy lighten the act throughout.

Act, while mainly geared for Scot payees, is very much okay also for emigrant Scots in North America and elsewhere, and would also register with more general audiences, especially on radio and disks. It is a well-paced turn that scores via its infectious enthusiasm, simplicity and lack of sophistication. Okay for general run of vauderies and for certain video outlets. Gord.

STACEY & SKOWRON
Dance
12 Mins.
Monticello, Framingham, Mass.

Bright, youthful, personable and enthusiastic dance team essay clean, sharp overhead lifts and spins in a torrid stint that runs gamut with jazz, musical comedy and adagio. The team has plenty going for it visually and artistically. Femme half, Ada, is a 5-1 brownette looker with a figger who studied her ballet terp in Poland, and then the dance with Jose Limon and Martha Graham in U.S., and has done her homework well. They open with "Merry Widow" in which comes the first of series of continuing one arm overhead lifts. Male half of act, though slight of build, is heavily arm-powered and his timing is expert.

Act's costuming is good showmanship. He wears tight fitting black leather trousers and jersey and she's in ice-blue breakaway gown. Their tricks have continuity and as they go into flare, femme is lifted by partner with rises carousel music, and goes into a one leg spin, an applausegetter. Pair go into a boy-girl "Honeysuckle Rose" bit; femme flips skirt and lad dons derby for musicomedy skit; then segue into their big offering, "Man With Golden Arm." It's a jazz number, in which femme demos snakelike movements, slithering up partner's back and around to a culmination of pantherlike movements to windup for heavy mitting.

Dance team shows lots of grace too, and should do well in nightclubs, hotels, and posh spots. Their act looks also very suitable for tv and musicomedy. Guy.

MILLIE MORRIS
Songs
30 Mins.
Le Diplomate, Hull, Que.

Nicely stacked thrush Millie Morris has an unusual variety of sound. Opening "All of Me" like a concert contralto, she segues into a belting finale, then pace-changes to "Wish You Love" in a velvety voice, which soon took on an ironical edge. Later she was velvety-to-belting in "After You've Gone."

Miss Morris purred "Nearness of You," gradually intensifying, then went into a terrific workover of the Andrews Sisters' calypso classic, "Rum and Coca Cola," with loads of personality, amusing interpolations and new verses—a couple aimed at nearby tables. After a requested "San Francisco"—done with considerable style—she unwisely wound with the infinitely hackneyed "Old Black Magic," but gave it some freshness with a calypso beat.

Excellent rapport with audience but her "Thank you. Thank you very much," becomes monotonous and also sounds a bit phony because she rarely looks at the applauders while saying it, but turns to check a list on the piano for her next number. That's her only real fault, easily corrected. She holds beaucoup promise for most media. She got skilled, flexible backing from Larry Quirouette's piano-drums duo. Gard.

ALEXANDER BROS. (2)
Songs
10 Mins.
Metropole, Glasgow

Two kilted males give out with jaunty songalog and register strongly in act that has lotsa potential.

Real brothers, twosome score particularly in tender native ballads and in zipalong Scot numbers that set the feet a-tapping and the kilts a-swingin'. One of the pair is seated at piano, while the other fingers a numble piano-accordion. At one stage of the act, offstage sound recording of seawaves and seabirds is played for novelty effect.

Pair score most of all in the jaunty type of Scot melody and medley, mainly in numbers like "Cock o' the North," etc. Act could benefit from acquiring some shape in content, but it is also too short in duration. Twosome put across their Highland tunes with lotsa zest and jollity.

Okay for vaude, disks and certain video outlets, and a surefire bet for tours of Scot emigrants in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, etc. Gord.

LENNY BRUCE'S CONDITION

Lung Congestion, Not Collapse, Is The Diagnosis

Lenny Bruce's operation last Wed. (22) at Flower Hospital was to relieve a lung condition that had been caused by an attack of, as his physician described it, a form of pleurisy which caused fluid to collect. Dr. Melvin Rosenzweig, Bruce's physician, said that there was no lung collapse as earlier news reports had stated. He also said that Bruce was in good condition.

Hospital Monday (27) reported his condition as satisfactory but that he would be there for a few days more.

Bruce is currently awaiting trial on two charges of "obscenity" in his performances at the Cafe au Go Go, a Bleecker St. coffeehouse. The trial date has been reported as May 8.

Greek Theatre to Operate Hartford Playhouse; L.A. Pattern Re-Mapped

Hollywood, April 28.

Deal has been closed for sale of the Huntington Hartford Theatre, 1,032-seat legit deluxer in the center of Hollywood, to the Greek Theatre Assn., which for many years has operated the open-air Greek Theatre.

Transaction was for a figure "in excess of $1,000,000." Theatre, across the street from the Hollywood Brown Derby, has been on the block for some time, initially at $1,500,000. It's been open only sporadically during past few years.

Demolition of the downtown Los Angeles Biltmore Theatre, 40-year-old legiter adjoining Biltmore Hotel, now looms likely following lapse of the lease currently held on property by Greek Theatre Assn. in August. It now becomes evident that legit operations at Biltmore probably will go over to the Hartford.

Greek Theatre Assn., under terms of deal made in December, 1960, when Biltmore was sold to real estate combine of Joseph Harris, David Karno and Joseph Rubin, had option to continue running Biltmore. However, if its lease was dropped, house was to be torn down and replaced by a garage or parking facility.

James A. Doolittle, general director of Greek, has been in the east lining up upcoming Greek and Hartford seasons. He's aiming for "Hamlet," starring Richard Burton, to reopen Hartford under the Greek banner.

HH, which was built in the late 1920s and operated as the Vine Street Theatre for many years, was purchased by Huntington Hartford in late 1953 and reopened as the Huntington Hartford Theatre Sept. 27, 1954 with Helen Hayes in a revival of "What Every Woman Knows." Last show booked there was "1,000 Clowns," two months ago. Biltmore closed a three-week stand of "Enter Laughing" last Saturday night.

Broadway Pros Help Launch Restoration Of Hoary Lancaster Site

Lancaster, Pa., April 28.

Cuffo and classy contributions by Broadway personalities Dina Merrill, Hermione Gingold, Jack Manning, Chita Rivera, Zachary Scott and Ruth Ford highlighted a recent performance in the old Fulton Opera House here. It was a sellout with more than 800 seats going on a $4-$6 scale. Object was the kickoff of campaign to raise $120,000 for initial restoration work on the 112-year-old theatre, recently acquired by Fulton Opera House Foundation, nonprofit citizens' group.

Scott and his wife, Miss Ford, worked smoothly as emcee team for the variety bill that included ballet (Lucia Sciorsci and Michael Uthoff of Juilliard School, N.Y.); songs by Miss Rivera, working 15-piece band playing for first time in restored pit; Miss Merrill and Manning pacing a half hour run of Shakespearean excerpts presented by the Helen Hayes Repertory Company from N.Y. and a patter routine by Miss Gingold, finishing with her "Which Witch?" bit.

Pro offerings were balanced with some local talent stage pieces, including a scene from "The Matchmaker," by Lancaster Theatre Arts Assn.; Albee's "The Sand Box," by Green Room Club Theatre of Franklin & Marshall College, and the first act intro scene between Rodolpho and Mimi in Puccini's "La Boheme," sung by Bill Burnaford and Elna Urban, of Lancaster Opera Workshop.

Eddie Padula, N.Y. producer who helped Foundation committee line up the pro talent, also spoke briefly from stage.

Anouilh's 'Rehearsal' For Stage Society in L.A.

Los Angeles, April 28.

Jean Anouilh's "The Rehearsal" will have its Coast preem here in mid-May at the Stage Society Theatre. Producers Stephen Brown and John Harding have signed Mabel Albertson to direct, and Walter Plunkett will do costumes.

"Night of the Iguana" closed April 19, after a seven-month run.

Galway Theatre (Gaelic) May Turn Professional

Galway, April 28.

Taibhdhearc na Gaillimhe (Galway theatre), a local Irish-language group, may soon become a professional. The move would be part of a proposal for promotion of the Gaelic language, supported by Irish Actors' Equity.

The theatre has operated in this seaport for a number of years with occasional performances, largely by students from the local Univ. College. Siobhan McKenna was once a member of the group and Michael MacLiammoir was a former producer, as was Frank Dermody, now an Abbey Theatre producer.

Business has been modest, however, and operations have only been possible with government subsidy. A much larger subsidy would be needed to put the outfit on a professional basis.

Crix Pick 'Luther' Year's Best Play, 'Dolly' as Tuner

"Luther" and "Hello, Dolly" were voted the respective best play and musical of the season by the N.Y. Drama Critics Circle yesterday (Tues.). In the straight play category, "Luther" led with six votes, followed by "After the Fall," and "The Rehearsal," with three each; "Chips With Everything," two, and "Blues for Mister Charlie," "Barefoot in the Park," "Dylan" and the off-Broadway drama, "The Blood Knot," one each. The vote for the off-Broadway entry was cast by N.Y. Times drama critic Howard Taubman, circle president.

The musicals in the running, besides "Dolly," which got the nod from 13 critics, were "Funny Girl," "High Spirits" and "Anyone Can Whistle," with one vote each. Two critics did not register votes in the musical division. A special citation was awarded to the off-Broadway production of "The Trojan Women" for the excellence of its production.

Both "Luther" and "Dolly" are David Merrick productions.

DELFONT PRIMES TWO BIG LONDON MUSICALS

London, April 28.

Bernard Delfont is lining up two top budget musicals for the late fall. The first is the Alun Owen-Lionel Bart tuner, "Maggie May," which will star Rachel Roberts and Tom Bell, and is skedded for a four weeks season at Manchester on August 17 before it reaches London. Ted Kotcheff will stage "Maggie May," with decor by Sean Kenny.

The story of a Liverpool prostie will cost nearly $225,000 to produce and is claimed to be one of the most expensive British musicals ever. Miss Roberts has not been in a West End musical since "Oh, My Papa" in 1956.

With Arthur Lewis, Delfont will present Kenneth More and Millicent Martin in an adaptation of J. M. Barrie's "Admirable Crichton" by Dave Lee and Herbert Kretzmer and it is due for the West End in October. It will be More's first musical show, though he played the title role in a film.

Set Hal March as Star Of 'Wayward Stork' Tour

Hal March is to star in Harry Tugend's "The Wayward Stork," the first of three plays to be produced by Garrick Productions this summer in association with United Artists.

Rehearsals are scheduled to begin June 14 and a summer tour, which will take in the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse and Elitch Gardens, Denver, is slated to get underway July 6.

DETROIT NEWS' NEW CRITIC

Jay Carr of N.Y. Post Makes It There

Jay Carr, formerly with the New York Post as an editorial assistant and occasional legit-film reviewer, has moved over to the Detroit News in the dual capacity of drama critic and music appraiser. He succeeds Armand Gebert who had served without title for about seven months as replacement for Joseph Mossman, who resigned.

Gebert has been reassigned to the news staff.

At the Post, Carr had also spelled drama department editor Ben Rosenberg when the latter vacationed last year. A 29-year-old graduate of City College, Carr had worked for the Post about four years.

Governor Signs 2 Theatre Bills; Effective June 1

Albany, April 28.

The signing by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of two bills relating to the New York theatre represented a victory for Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz. In approving the measures, the governor issued a statement that they are designed to encourage the growth of legit, which is "essential to the cultural well-being of the people."

The bills, introduced by Sen. Samuel L. Greenberg, Brooklyn Democrat, and Assemblyman Anthony P. Savarese Jr., Kew Gardens Republican, were proposed by Lefkowitz, on the basis of alleged corruption uncovered during an investigation last winter. The bills become effective June 1. A third measure sponsored by the Attorney General, relating to ticket distribution, died in the Legislature.

It's figured that a failure of the governor to okay the measures, after Senate and Assembly adoption, would have been taken as repudiation or criticism of Lefkowitz, the running mate for Rockefeller in the 1958 and 1962 state elections. In that connection, it's pointed out that the Attorney General has numerous connections in Albany, having been a member of the Assembly, research counsel to the Speaker, and counsel to Joint Legislative Committees.

In his message, Rockefeller noted that the Greenberg measure is designed to regulate the financing of theatrical productions. Among its provisions, it would:

Require production companies to maintain accurate books and records of account, and furnish investors with certified balance sheets

LONDON 'CAMELOT' FOR DRURY LANE THEATRE

London, April 28.

"Camelot," the Alan J. Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical, is to come into the Drury Lane this summer, opening around the end of August or early September. The production will be presented under the Jack Hylton management.

Robert Helpmann is being sought to stage the tuner. No casting is set, but auditions are about to start.

Since the fold of "Boys From Syracuse" several months ago, the Drury Lane has had several bookings of dance companies. Currently at the theatre is the Mexican folk ballet, presented by Sol Hurok.

Senior Stage Citizen

Director Reginald Denham, who took off for Australia recently with his actress-wife, Mary Orr, is celebrating his 50th anniversary in the theatre this year. In Australia, his wife will play the lead femme role in "Never Too Late." He's been asked to give some lectures there and it's possible he may also direct an undisclosed play.

Denham debuted as an actor 50 years ago with Herbert Beerbohm Tree's company at His Majesty's Theatre, London. He played a half-naked camel driver.

Equity, B'way League Negotiate; See Union Approval of MATA Pact

By JESSE GROSS

Actors Equity and the League of N. Y. Theatres launched negotiations last week for a new contract covering working conditions for Broadway and the road. Although the key issues haven't been disclosed, it is believed that one of the union's demands will be to have rehearsal pay elevated from a present $97.50 to the Broadway minimum for regular performances which is currently $117.50.

It's also figured that increases in certain fringe benefits, pay television and the importation of alien actors are among other areas that will be covered in the negotiations. The first meeting between Equity and the League, which represents Broadway theatre owners and producers, was held Thursday (23). The next session is scheduled for tomorrow (Thurs.).

Meanwhile, Equity's council was expected yesterday (Tues.) to approve a new pact with the Musical Arena Theatres Assn. A two-year agreement, reached between the negotiating committees for the union and MATA, was ratified by the organization of cavastop theatres, of which David Marshall Holtzmann is president. The outcome of yesterday's council conclave could not be ascertained as of VARIETY's deadline.

Under the terms of the contract, which the two organizations had been hammering out for the last few months, Equity gets a maximum wage increase of $7.50, as well as pension contributions. The pension setup, covering a four-year period, calls for contributions by tent operators of 2% of the gross payroll this year and next and 3% in '66 and '67. Incidentally, the two-

Mann Burning at Equity Off-B'way Alien Rule

Ted Mann, currently represented off-Broadway as producer of "The Trojan Women," "Six Characters in Search of An Author" and "Trumpets of the Lord," is steamed up at Actors Equity. He's protesting the union's regulations that Broadway minimums prevail when a foreign player is imported for an off-Broadway production.

The producer was hit by the rule when Equity refused to allow British actress Claire Bloom to perform in "Trojan Woman" at the off-Broadway scale, but gave an okay for American actress Mildred Dunnock to take the assignment on an off-Broadway contract. Mann argues that the setup is unfair, on on the ground that it was Miss Bloom who suggested he do "Trojan Woman," and introduced him to the play's director, Michael Cacoyannis.

Court Allows U.S. To Intervene In Shubert Tax Suit

N. Y. State Supreme Court Justice George M. Carney has granted the U.S. the right to intervene in a legal action to determine the value of the theatrical partnership of the late Lee and J. J. Shubert. The Government had requested such a right to protect tax claims against the Lee and J. J. estates. Each owned a 50% interest in the partnership, which U. S. Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau has valued at more than $50,000,000.

Because of Justice Carney's action, the Government must be kept informed by the executors of all legal and financial actions involving the estates. The Government is seeking $15,000,000 from the estate of Lee Shubert, who died Dec. 25, 1953. J. J. died last Dec. 26, and there's as yet been no disclosure of the amount of the claim against his estate.

The Government and the executors of Lee's estate contend that the partnership is worth $50,000,000. The executors of J. J.'s estate estimate the amount at $15,000,000. These figures have come into play as part of several legal actions involving the Shubert partnership. Currently heading the organization, founded by J. J., Lee and their older brother, Sam S., also deceased, is their nephew, Shubert Lawrence Jr.

HARRY MacARTHUR IN CARMODY'S D.C. POST

Washington, April 28.

Jay Carmody, retiring next Friday (1) as drama critic of the Washington Star, a post he's held for 28 years, will be succeeded by Harry MacArthur who has been the paper's associate drama editor for the last nine years.

MacArthur joined The Star 31 years ago as a copy boy. Associates are feed-speeding Carmody to pasture.

Albee's Recurring 'Dream'; Teams With 'Dutchman'

Theatre 1964, the Richard Barr, Clinton Wilder and Edward Albee production firm, has again juggled its program at the Cherry Lane Theatre, N.Y. Revived there is Albee's "The American Dream," for a fifth time now in tandem with LeRoi Jones' "Dutchman".

"Dutchman" opened at the Cherry Lane recently as a replacement for Harold Pinter's "The Lover," which had been paired with Samuel Beckett's "Play." The Beckett work was continued with "Dutchman," and Arrabal's "The Two Executioners." Now "Play" and "Executioners" have been dropped, after respective runs of 121 performances and 32 performances.

Cincy's Park Playhouse Preems Season May 13 With 'Burnt Flower Bed'

Cincinnati, April 28.

Ugo Betti's "The Burnt Flower Bed," which Joel Schenker has under option for Broadway production, is scheduled for presentation at the Playhouse in the Park here May 13-24. The theatre, under the management of Brooks Jones, is currently in its second season with a program of seven subscription entries. "Arms and the Man," the first offering in the series, ended a three-week run April 10.

"Arms" was directed by Donald Moffat, on a three-week leave from the cast of the off-Broadway production of "The Caretaker" to stage the George Bernard Shaw play. Besides the subscription shows, to end with a July 29-Aug. 16 presentation of "The Threepenny Opera," the Playhouse had a special March 19-29 pre-season presentation of a double-bill consisting of "The Zoo Story" and "Don Perlimplin."

"The Fantasticks" is scheduled as a post-season special Aug. 19-Sept. 5. "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, . . ." opening last Wednesday (22), "Doctor in Spite of Himself," "Rhinoceros" and "A Moon for the Misbegotten" are the other subscription entries. Local residents have pledged $120,000 toward a three-year building program, designed by New York architect Hugh Hardy. Earlier this month, 1,000 subscriptions had been sold for the current season, 400 more than at the comparable time last year.

Playhouse special shows are offered as a bonus to subscribers to the seven-play subscription series at the regular weeknight boxoffice price of $3 per ticket, for a total of $21. The weeknight subscription rate for the seven-play series is $17.

Deadline Is Tuesday (5) On Theatre School Bids

The deadline on applications for auditions to the National Theatre School of Canada is next Tuesday (5). The school, now in its fourth year of operation in Montreal, begins its next semester Nov. 2.

Jean-Pierre Ronfard, James de B. Domville and Powys Thomas are directors of the school, which limits the number of students accepted in any year to 30 for its acting course and 10 between design and production courses.

Ballad of the Sad 'Cafe Crown'

Hy Kraft, Forgotten Man as Original Author-Adaptor, Offers Bill of Suggestions

By HY KRAFT

(Author of the book of the recent Broadway musical based on his own comedy of the same title.)

Though I wasn't present opening night—or the previous night—I fully agree with the reviews of "Cafe Crown." The show shouldn't have opened when it did, and its quick closing came as no surprise to me or to a number of people directly and indirectly associated with this abortive entertainment. In fact, the closing notice was up two weeks prior to the actual closing, marking a "first" in Broadway history.

It was suggested by those who had read the original book and/or the original play from which it was adapted, that I distribute copies to the critics of one or the other, but this would have only led to further confusion if not to complete suspension of belief.

However, there are lessons to be gleaned from so spectacular a debacle and I offer them free and gratis to my contemporaries and to younger writers, since these are all recommendations not covered by the Minimum Basic Agreement and concern the relationship between director and playwright and, to a minor extent, playwright and producer. (Lyricists and composers may make their own suggestions.)

1. The author of a play on which a musical is based should avoid doing the adaptation. No matter how familiar with the material and the milieu, the original author is vulnerable to the accusation that he's trying to retain material which worked in the play and obviously (?) won't work in the musical. "You're too close to the material," is one of the nicer expressions; the others are obscenities too wellknown to mention.

2. A director should not be allowed to use pencil, ballpoint or fountain pen, typewriter or any other instrument of writing, including a secretary. The director should be searched when he enters and leaves rehearsals and if any of the above articles, including secretary, is found on him then he should be kicked the hell out.

3. Directors who have never directed a Broadway show should be subject to the same five-day probationary period provided for actors.

4. The director should agree to allow the author at least one 10-minute period during which the author may explain and discuss the play with the cast.

5. A director who uses any of the following phrases or variations thereof should be considered suspect:

"I am confused."

"This song needs a trigger."

"We're losing the motor."

"Let us consider what are the 'druthers'."

"If I don't get some sleep, I'll be no good."

"I won't have anyone sitting in front of me in the theatre during rehearsals. I'm sorry, but you'll have to move to the rear."

"Wait till I get it on its feet."

"Wait till you see it in the theatre."

"You must have faith in me."

"These lines are just fill-ins, they'll come out."

"I didn't want to bother you; I knew you wouldn't mind this small change."

"Meetings are a waste of time."

6. An author should invariably be provided with copies of the changes he didn't make.

7. If the author is a friend of the star, it should not be considered a conspiracy if they independently or in concert with other actors, request the producer to fire the director.

8. The producer should not make threats to open the show earlier if the author and actor persist in making such a demand.

9. If a director glibly improvises a ballet compressing a Shakespearian drama, he—the director—should be compelled to execute the ballet—or himself.

10. Any author who stands for this kind of treatment without calling on the Dramatists Guild immediately for help or relief is a damned fool and has no one to blame but himself. The opportunities in the theatre are so few and so far between that I have no sympathy for any author or playwright who permits his work to be mangled and destroyed. And I do mean me.

In the small mountain of papers relating to "Cafe Crown," I find a telegram dated January 24, 1943 following the opening of the original play. It reads, "Dear Hy, I'm still laughing. Bob Benchley."

N.Y. State Theater

the ideal situation for an audience preponderantly above, say, tactfully, 40 years of age and addicted to specs. Whether television pickups must be regarded as an inescapable part of the price of culture need not be argued here. Presently the tv show was over and every body could glide around the wonderfully large and stately main rotunda, like nothing else which comes to mind, not forgetting the Paris Opera.

The Governor stressed that the building was the gift of the Albany legislature. Very cleverly he invited Assemblyman Tony Savarese and the other solons to stand for audience applause. Rocky quipped that anybody in politics well knew what courage it required in elected legislators to vote funds for culture. Rockefeller was in good form in his talk, confining himself to the state's leadership through its university expansion program, its Council on the Arts, the State Pavidion at the Fair and now the splendid State Theater for this and future generations.

Acting as emcee both for the preliminaries and the telecast was Lieut.-Gov. Malcolm Wilson, of Yonkers, who possesses as beautiful a speaking voice and style as politics may boast. Robert Moses was his usual cryptic-verging-on-sardonic self while John D. Rockefeller 3d spoke with his customary sincerity. He always make a good impression and he never indulges in even a trace of joke. William Schuman, composer-president of Lincoln Center was the other speaker, also long on dignity.

The New York State emphasis was repeated when the waiters started circulating with the home-grown champagne. The bubbly did not originate in foreign places like California. Both the lower (ticket window) lobby and the promenade above are optically stunning. Patrons pass, weather permitting, to the pillared porch from which was afforded a fine view of the new fountain in the plaza, the Philharmonic in full operation, and the scaffolding behind which the Metropolitan Opera is rising.

The generous space for people, the handy cloakroom, equally handy bar (lots of horizontal approach to both) and the many doors to the main auditorium lettered by the rows to which they lead are all evidence of the imagination in planning. There is no centre aisle. Entrance is from either side, a la the Goodman Theatre in Chicago and the Kenneth Macgowan in UCLA. The knee-space permits patrons to pass with at least partial accommodation before those who do not get up. It may be a brave man in the midsection who dares leave the room during an act.

A glimpse of the basement area, where a pressroom had been set up for the opening, disclosed that work remains but in general the house was in neat order. There are manned elevators to take aloft those seated topside.

As for the main rotunda, it will certainly be used more than one time for a charity ball. It cries out with that inspiration. Of course the State Theater itself will be as good as its productions, a truism which Schuman underlined. But for some time the excitement of the premises will be a show in and of itself. Everybody was congraulating everybody else in those speeches at the premiere but it was impossible to quibble. The case for mutual admiration was overpowering.

Staging and Lecturing

British director Margaret Webster is staging a Boston Univ. production of "Measure for Measure" which is to be presented at the school's theatre tomorrow (Thurs.) through Saturday (2). Horace Armistead and Raymond Sovey, both of the university's theatre arts faculty, are designing the sets and costumes, respectively.

Miss Webster is also lecturing in the university's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

Saved by City, Carnegie Hall Full of Zest

Carnegie Hall, saved by the City of New York only a few years ago after the state legislature at Albany passed enabling legislation for the issuance of bonds, has since initiated a good deal of creative booking of its own. In no sense is the new Carnegie a mere rental accommodation for outside impresari. In proof of this the Hall itself, under Executive Director Julius Bloom, will promote eight different series next season.

It's so-called International Festival of Visiting Orchestras will comprise four parallel series, each of six concerts, by such ensembles as the symphonies from Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, London, Cleveland, Pittsbudgh, Berlin, London, Hague, Warsaw, Baltimore, Houston, British Broadcasting and Munich Back Choir.

Morris Agency Covering Canvastops Like a Tent; Books Flock of Names

Musical stock will be blanketed this summer with performing talent from the William Morris Agency. An impressive roster of names has been set by the agency. Charles Baker, head of the legit department, and Ed Robbins, in charge of the stock division, figure that the release of the stock rights of such tuners as "My Fair Lady" and "Sound of Music," as well as "Camelot" on a restricted basis, is contributing importantly to the heavy play being given the musicals by the agency.

Some of the William Morris clients and the show's in which they're to appear this summer are:

Jane Powell and Michael Allinson, "Lady"; Molly Picon, "Milk and Honey"; Earl Wrightson, "Camelot" and "Paint Your Wagon"; Barbara Cook, "Sound" and "The Unsinkable Molly Brown"; Anna Maria Alberghetti, "West Side Story"; Nanete Fabray, "Unsinkable"; Betty Hutton, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"; Barbara McNair, "No Strings"; Juliet Prowse, "Irma La Douce" and "Damn Yankees"; Martha Raye, "Wildcat"; Marion Marlowe, "Gypsy," and Jane Morgan, "Tovarich" and "Gypsy."

Also, Vivian Blaine, "Guys and Dolls"; Giselle MacKenzie, "The King and I" and "Gypsy"; Allen Case, "Oklahoma"; Robert Clary, "Around the World in 80 Days"; Molly Bee, "Finian's Rainbow"; Karen Morrow, "Little Me" and "Pajama"; Peter Palmer, "Li'l Abner"; Carmel Quinn, "Finian's Rainbow," "King" and "Sound"; Lois Hunt, "Camelot"; Van Johnson, "Bye Bye Birdie"; Phil Ford and Mimi Hines, Pajama"; Bobby Rydell, "Tom Sawyer" and Ray Danton, "110 in the Shade," which will precede a tour with Civic Light Opera engagements on the Coast.

Practically everything in "Blues for Mister Charlie" has been said in previous plays, and more skillfully. But because of the explosive events in current headlines, this James Baldwin melodrama has a new and terrible urgency. The Actors Studio Theatre production opened last Thursday night (23) at the ANTA Theatre.

As the novelist-turned-playwright has emphasized in interviews, "Blues for Mister Charlie," is not intended to entertain or please, but as a cry of defiance and warning, to anger and shock the audience, to make it think. Although the author's stagecraft is crude, the play's impact is indeed staggering, at least in the context of today. That impression is especially vivid considering the militant enthusiasm of many of the first-nighters for the show's violently emotional passages.

Very few plays throb with such passionate hatred and rage as "Blues for Mister Charlie." But despite the show's combustible subject matter and furious tone, the dramatic effect is seriously weakened by the clumsy writing, with its sprawling form, repetitiousness and hysteria, as well as its spotty presentation. So while it obviously satisfies audiences already emotionally committed, it's an uncertain boxoffice prospect, even at the low ($4.80 top) scale, a negligible item for pictures, at least for a general release production, and offers little for stock.

The play's title refers to the Negro's sarcastic name for any white man as Mister Charlie, and suggests that a painful and perhaps tragic reckoning is due for the oppressor people. The plot, with the action jumping about in time and place, is a lurid, disjointed and all-too-familiar account of stupid, vicious events. It involves a white man's callous murder of a rebellious Negro youth in a southern town, and shows the approval of the crime by the bigoted whites, the killer's acquittal and finally the burning determination of the arousned Negroes to fight for justice, equality and dignity.

The performance, without scenery and with only a black backdrop, a ramp upstage center and expressive lighting, runs about three hours, despite reportedly drastic cutting in the few days before opening. There are glaring evidences of major and hasty surgery, such as totally extraneous characters like the supposed disk jockey who sits at the side of the stage throughout, without a line or a bit of business, as well as various seemingly vestiginal scenes and episodes unrelated to anything.

Under Burgess Meredith's ingeniously conceived but occasionally indulgent direction, the performance is uneven, with little suggestion of tempo, and passages of admirable control interspersed with moments of exaggerated emotion and outright ranting. The general effect tends to be of vital dramatic material turned into a strident and incendiary social tract and, except for audiences keyed up to applaud any protest on the subject, an unsatisfying show.

As the racially psychopathic killer, Rip Torn gives a believable, strong and unvarying performance. Al Freeman Jr. has plausible swagger, insolence and heat as the bitter Negro youth who seems practically determined on martyrdom, and Percy Rodriguez is quietly expressive as the doomed lad's earnest and extraordinarily patient father, except in the reading of an impassioned funeral service, when he lets emotion take control.

Diana Sands is generally superb and moving as the victim's sweetheart who, at his death, hopes she's pregnant so she will have a son to carry on the struggle for justice, but she also has a few unrestrained moments. Pat Hingle is well modulated in the ill-conceived role of a well-meaning white man with a not-so-secret urge for all Negroes—apparently of both sexes. Ann Wedgeworth is excellent in the difficult part of the slayer's shallow wife.

Perhaps it doesn't matter particularly that as a racial protest play, "Blues for Mister Charlie" violates the fundamental principle of human equality — that people should be judged and treated according to individual merit rather than on the basis of color, creed or nationality. In that sense, it is itself racially biased, as all the Negro characters, even the dope-addicted, deliberately provoking young murder victim, are all sympathetic, while all the whites are hypocrites and/or villains, or in one case a well-intentioned bumbler.

The immediate point is that this first Broadway-produced play by a successful novelist and essayist is a failure as stagecraft, primarily because of the author's own ineptness. In the case of "Blues for Mister Charlie," the drama's power lies in the topically inflammable material, not in the theatrical presentation. Hobe.

The Savarese act, Gov. Rockefeller explained, amends the Penal Law "to provide that it shall be a misdemeanor for designated officers of a theatre to exact or receive any premium or price for a ticket in excess of the regular or established price or charge on the face of the ticket."

It also permits "lawful taxes," and gives the Attorney General concurrent jurisdiction with district attorneys, in enforcement.

No reference was made, in the memorandum, to any opposition to the bills, nor to any support other than that of Lefkowitz. Both were forcibly expressed at a public hearing Feb. 23 in the Assembly Chamber, when Lefkowitz and Deputy Attorney General David Clurman were present, with representatives from the New York theatre and with show business attorneys. Each measure underwent perfecting amendments.

The third bill, which failed of passage, proposed the addition of a subdivision to Section 399 of the General Business Law, prohibiting a theatre owner, lessee, operator or other personnel of a theatre showing theatrical productions to sell tickets unless there was filed with the State Law Department a "ticket distributor registration." Latter would have included names, addresses and connection with ticket distribution of all theatre personnel.

B'way Hot; 'Hamlet' Record $73,514, 'Kiss' $27,861 (9); 'Succeed,' 'Run,' 'Late,' '110,' 'Oliver,' 'Love,' 'Albatross' Jump

Broadway was snappy last week, with conventions of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. and other organizations figured major contributing factors. Still moot is whether the opening of the World's Fair last week figured in the b.o. boom. There were eight sellout shows, and several others, although failing to go clean, registered hefty takes.

In the capacity groove were "Any Wednesday," "Baby Want a Kiss," "Barefoot in the Park," "The Deputy," "Funny Girl," "Hamlet," "Hello, Dolly" and "High Spirits." The Shakespeare revival, establishing a record for the Lunt-Fontainne Theatre, was the stanza's top-grosser. There were two openings last week, both Actors Studio Theatre productions. As indicated above, one of those, "Baby Want a Kiss," got off to a strong start. The other "Blues for Mr. Charlie" had an okay opening session considering it played only four regular performances, plus three previews.

There were no closings last week and no openings are scheduled for this stanza. The advent of daylight saving time last Sunday (26) is expected to bring a traditional slowdown in business for a period of about 10 days or so.

Dance Review

Norman Walker & Co.

(Printing Aud, N.Y.)

Hitherto unknown as a site for dance recitals, Auditorium of the N.Y. School of Printing (on West 49th st.) was utilized for Norman Walker and his 10 dancers. Group has benefited from much touring last season and the dancing, as and performing experience in the well as choreographic aspects shown, were good. Walker's work is stronger in comunication and in the range of moods. The program consisted of "Reflections" (Dello Joio) "Figures and Masks" (Karlin) "The Triumph of Aphrodite" (Orff) and "The Testament of Cain." Featured dancers were Cora Cahan and William Louther (as guest) and both displayed technical skill and dramatic projection. Dennis Wayne and Jane Kosminsky should also be singled out and the entire company is as attractive as technically proficient.

Leaving the best for last, Walker's new work (world premiere) "Testament of Cain" was the most mature and powerful in its dramatic impact and also showed taste and dignity. The subtitle read "in Memory of John F. Kennedy" (to Roy Harris' Third Symphony) and it dealt with the most acceptable symbolism of an ever recurring theme of goodness being destroyed by hate and violence. Goth.

Bits of London

London, April 28.

The Royal Court Theatre has closed till September for re-decoration and structural alterations.

The curtain was delayed for a performance of "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" last week at the Piccadilly Theatre, as costar Arthur Hill was treated by a physician for stomach pains.

Thomas Round, D'Oyly Carte principal tenor, quits the company in June.

Laverne Gray and Trevor Richins, of "The Sound of Music" company are engaged to marry.

Peter Bridge was slightly injured in an auto accident, but has returned to his producing office.

Donald Swawn and Michael Flanders will tour Australia next fall in their review, "At the Drop of a Hat," for the J. C. Williamson management.

The membership of British Equity approved by a two-to-one vote a proposal to allow Sunday night openings in the West End.

Betty Marsden was hospitalized for rest and checkup after the sudden demise of "Everybody Loves Opal," in which she starred.

Roy Jameson took over last night (Mon.) as male lead in "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." He's subbing for Warren Berlinger, who's vacationing.

Feldman Shows Played 118 Weeks At His 4 Stock Houses Last Year

Laurence Feldman, as producer for the Laurence-Henry Co., did the shows for 118 weeks of playing time in four legit houses last year. That, plus outside bookings of Laurence-Henry shows, represented a total gross of over $3,000,000 for the firm's productions during 1963, he says.

The four spots that operated under the Laurence Henry banner included two year-around operations, the Mineola (L.I.) Playhouse and the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N.J. The other two were the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse (summer only) and the Brown Theatre, Louisville, the latter a regular road house which played a four-week stock season of Laurence-Henry presentations.

This year the Feldman firm is continuing its year-around activities in Mineola and Millburn, as well as its summer operation in Westport. The association with the Louisville house has been dissolved, and the string of theatres on the Laurence-Henry list now includes the Yonkers (N.Y.) Playhouse, a new year-around addition. The latter spot, with Van Johnson in "A Thousand Clowns" current, is operated by Miriam I. R. Eolis and Matt Cimber, but books Laurence-Henry productions.

The Mineola Playhouse, currently presenting Michael Evans and Margot Moser in "My Fair Lady," ran 51 weeks last year with a total of 29 shows. The Paper Mill, now offering Gertrude Berg in "Dear Me, the Sky Is Falling," had 17 offerings in '63 over a 50-week span. Westport, which opens its summer season June 12 with "Lady," played 13 weeks with 12 entries last year, and the four-week Brown session took in a show a week. Most of the productions were routed from one house to another.

Feldman anticipates at least 160 weeks of playing time for his shows this year at the Mineola, Millburn, Yonkers and Westport theatres. In line with this, he also envisions a substantial increase in gross revenue. He claims that grosses were about $1,250,000 apiece last year in Mineola and Millburn. The tallies in Westport and Louisville, he says, were about $300,000 and $70,000, respectively.

Other gross income last year, the producer says, included approximately $100,000 from the Martyn Green tour in a Gilbert & Sullivan program; about $150,000 from outside bookings of a stock package of "Come Blow Your Horn," starring Menasha Skulnik, and around $30,000 from performances by Feldman's non-profit Dolphin Children's Theatre. Among other Laurence-Henry packages booked in outside houses last year were Hans Conreid in "Take Her, She's Mine," Eva Gabor in "A Shot in the Dark" and Dane Clark and Teresa Wright in "Tchin-Tchin."

Feldman, who's also been using his year-round stock outlets for tryout purposes, has several new shows lined up for break-in dates at one or more of the theatres with which he's associated. He's planning to do one of those in partnership with Gerard Oestreicher. It's Don Appell's "A Girl Could Get Lucky."

The firm's future sked also includes productions of "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mamma's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad," starring Hermione Gingold; "The Music Man," headlining Forrest Tucker; "Bus Stop," starring Jayne Mansfield; "The Sound of Music" and probably "Camelot" and "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off."

Claim Cardew the Cad

London, April 28.

Cardew Robinson, known to tv, radio and vaudeville for his silly "Cardew the Cad" comedy monologs, gets his first chance in a comedy star role in legit. He will appear in Stanley Dubens' production of "The Man Who Let It Rain" at the Theatre Royal, East, on May 14. The play by Marc Brandel will be staged by Herbert Wise.

Other leads in the cast will be Michael Aldridge, Patsy Rowlands and Moira Redmond.

Donaldson Drops Legit To Join London Agency

London, April 28.

William Donaldson has given up his legit producing interests to join the John Heyman group as an agent, working in association with Hugh French. His biggest legit success was the West End presentation of "Beyond the Fringe," which recently ended a three-year run at the Fortune Theatre and resumed last week at the May Fair.

Donaldson's switch to the Heyman group indicates the agency is to move into legit management. It is also expanding into vidpic production. On the basis of a pilot made last year, a deal is being closed with a major US network for "The Uneasy Crown" series, and full production is expected to start in the summer. Two other projects are also entering the pilot stage, the first a comedy series, "The Dook," produced by Endre Bohem and directed by Anton Leader, to start filming in July, and a documentary, "Profiles of Tomorrow," which will include such personalities as Lord Attlee, Anthony Eden and comparable American figures discoursing on subjects of the future.

Bil and Cora Baird Plan Puppet Theatre in N.Y.

Bil and Cora Baird plan giving New York its first permanent playhouse designed for and dedicated to puppet theatre. They intend building such a showcase in their six-story workshop-home in Greenwich Village. It's to be called the Bil Baird Theatre and will also include a public museum and gallery, as well as a library with books about puppetry and stage literature written for marionette theatre.

The spot, a 199-seater designed by Bil Baird and architect H. H. Cole, is expected to cost around $50,000. The Bairds will open their first puppet show in the house in March of next year.

Cole Porter's perennial "Kiss Me, Kate" is back in town and has lost none of its appeal. As the opener of the Civic Light Opera Assn. season, it remains still a gay and lilting musical, despite the fact that this is its third time around. B.o. prospects for the Sam and Bella Spewack spoof of the Bard's "Taming of the Shrew" are bright for the extravagantly-staged show's seven-week run locally, followed by a single stanza in Pasadena.

Of prime interest in the new version, besides a reprise of the tuneful songs, is the appearance of Patrice Munsel in the title role. She displays the proper fire for the part and allows none of her Metropolitan Opera background to interfere with her portrayal of the uninhibited, man-hating Paduan terror. Another happy note is the entry of Elizabeth Allen as the ingenue, expert both as singer and comedienne. She scores as costar with Miss Munsel and Robert Wright.

The "Kate" book, cannily scripted by the Spewacks, gets the most out of the play-within-a-play format, and the parallel between the characters in the Shakespearean revival and the characters playing it is neatly drawn.

The songs seem to improve with the years and that's where the stability of the piece lies. Practically every number carries certain nostalgic appeal. Among those best received are Miss Munsel's soloing of the tender "So in Love" and the raucus "I Hate Men"; her dueting with Wright in "Wunderbar"; Miss Allen's "Why Can't You Behave" and "Always True to You (In My Fashion)."

Wright, who starred in the same part in 1949 and 1955 versions, is especially effective in the delightful "Were Thine That Special Face," with seven dancing girls, and Miss Allen likewise shines with "Tom, Dick or Harry" with a male trio. Several production numbers also carry unusual interest, the opening "Another Op'nin', Another Show" and "Too Darn Hot."

Besides the three stars who fulfill the dual requirements of their respective roles, in both the 17th and 20th century segments, Roy Fitzell as Miss Allen's companion stands out as a dancer; Allen Jenkins, who appeared in the 1955 version, and Lennie Weinrib make hay as a pair of comedy musclemen; Don Beddoe returns competently in the father role. Avon Long does a trim song-and-dance number and Lyle Talbot is properly stuffy as Miss Munsel's fiance.

Edward Greenberg's staging catches the spirit of the piece. Both the scenery by Robert O'Hearn and costumes by Gwen Wakeling are beautifully effective, and Eugene Loring's choreography is inventive. The musical direction is under the able baton of Louis Adrian. Whit.

Set Bill Ross to Stage 'Man on Stairs,' London

William Ross is to direct Winifred Wolfe's "The Man on the Stairs," which John Grogan, Paula Stone and Jack H. Gordon are coproducing for a June 4 opening at the New Lyric Hammersmith Theatre, London. Ross, who left for London recently, has been a production stage manager on Broadway, as well as a director of canvastop musicals and stager of three touring companies of "Mary, Mary."

Miss Wolfe is an American novelist and the producers of "Man," her first play, intend presenting it on Broadway if the London production clicks.

The National Theatre has done William Shakespeare proud. Its contribution to the Bard's quadricentenary celebrations is a powerful revival of "Othello," with a performance of memorable quality by Laurence Olivier, playing the title role for the first time in his career. A few minor faults notwithstanding, this presentation will be remembered as one of the greats.

Olivier, who has played all the other great Shakespearean roles, had resisted the part of Othello. He can now add this unforgettable interpretation to his other acting achievements. Measured by any yardstick, this is a magnificent portrayal, a powerhouse study of the Moor whose passion and jealousy was triggered by the sly, cunning and poisonous Iago.

There is a marked change in emphasis in this revival. Othello is the dominant character throughout the drama this time, and Iago of lesser importance. This is partly due to John Dexter's direction, but largely because of the superiority of Olivier's acting.

Frank Finlay's Iago is unorthodox. There is a slyness but little conviction to his acting. Each poisonous verbal stab is followed by a wicked grin. The grin even shows again in the final sequences, after he has been wounded. At first Finlay tends to race through his lines and much of his dialog in the opening sequences is lost, but that is subsequently corrected.

Another exciting feature of the production is Maggie Smith's Desdemona. The actress' magnetic personality gives an added lustre to a warm, colorful and believable performance. Michael Rothwell makes Roderigo a divertingly foppish character, Derek Jacobi is an earnest Cassio, Harry Lomax offers authority and dignity as the Duke of Venice, and Joyce Redman and Mary Miller are excellent as Emilia and Bianca, respectively.

Dexter has staged a full-blooded production with distinctive flair, and Jocelyn Herbert's decor and costumes are outstanding. Excellent lighting by Leonard Tucker and unobtrusive music by Richard Hampton are other plus features.

In its first season the National Theatre has had a number of distinguished presentations, but "Othello" tops them all. Myro.

The Subtopians

London, April 15.

Playmaker Productions Ltd., by arrangement with Michael Codron, presentation of a drama in three acts, by Terence Frisby. Staged by the author; decor, Glen Edwards; lighting, John Hayes. Stars Bill Fraser, Betty Baskcomb. Features Arthur White, Mark Kingston, Margo Jenkins, Helen Cotterill. Opened April 14, '64, at the New Arts Theatre Club, London; $2.46 top.

Bert Mann	Bill Fraser
Maggie Mann	Betty Baskcomb
David Mann	Arthur White
Dorothy Mann	Helen Cotterhill
Tom Mann	Mark Kingston
Helen	Margo Jenkins

In the main, Terence Frisby's peek at suburban life is well-observed, with accurately drawn characters. The playwright has a keen ear for dialog, but a tendency to overwrite and to be repetitive. The subject, though frequently absorbing, breaks little new ground, minimising its prospects of a transfer to the West End for a commercial run.

Though the author has talent as a writer, he appears to be inexperienced as a director, and the performance, particularly through an overlong second act, is sluggish. However, tv performer Bill Fraser, is notable as a pompous but well-meaning suburban father and husband.

The plot involves a middleclass family with a mortgaged house, a car in the garage and a television set in the lounge. The shallowness of their life is revealed when an art student-son brings home his sweetheart to spend a week. The atmosphere is well contrived and maintained.

The three-act play is consistently interesting, without pretensions of profundity.

The play is well acted and, apart from Fraser's sterling portrayal, there is a moving study by Betty Baskcomb as a long-suffering wife, Arthur White and Mark Kingston give solid support as sons, Helen Cotterill plays a spirited daughter-in-law vivaciously and Margo Jenkins gives an earnest portrayal as the sweetheart.

Glen Edwards has designed a living room set suitable for the suburban locale, and John Hayes has provided efficient lighting. Myro.

Equity-League

year pact, which ends March 31, 1966, is retroactive to last April 1.

Wage increases won by Equity, under its new agreement with MATA, include the following:

Resident company members—a $7.50 hike from $80 to $87.50, effective this year.

Jobbers—a $7.50 boost from $85 to $92.50, effective this year.

Summer theatre classification (where resident company is not employed, but theatre puts on its own productions or books packages for which it's responsible)—minimum increase from $90 to $96 this year, then to $97.50 in 1965. This also applies to multi-theatre operations where several theatres coproduce a show or one management produces a vehicle for a string of its own theatres. Getting Equity to recognize multi-theatre operations is understood to have been one of MATA's principal accomplishments in the negotiations.

(The minimums referred to above are base, exclusive of cost of living increases.)

The new accord also covers special traveling rules, rehearsal rules and an increase in welfare payments for all actors in all categories from $2 to $3.50 weekly. MATA has also agreed that in newly-constructed theatres—those opening after the present summer season—provision will be made for three wash basins, two toilets and two showers in dressing rooms for each sex.

Existing theatres will not be affected by these changes, but have agreed to discuss with Equity how they may individually try to change their facilities in the future. Equity has also won additional money increases in fringe areas such as increased baggage and clothing allowances.

Improvements in working conditions include the provision of safer dance floors in the theatres and water facilities at isolated rehearsal spots. The tent managers have also agreed that the lower berth on pullman transportation will be scratched as a means of overnight travel and that roomette's will now be provided.

Equity has agreed to list the duties of the actor such as being prompt at rehearsal and at half-hour, emphasizing that infractions of these duties will lead to disciplinary proceedings, in accordance with Equity policy. Holtzmann, who's attorney for the Council of Stock Theatres, which employs stars, said that under the terms of that organization's contract, signed last year, the MATA conditions will be adopted by COST theatres when musicals are presented.

MATA, incidentally, has a membership of 33, each of which employs about 30 performers a week during the summer with seasons ranging from 10 to 16 weeks.

Karen Sargent is costarring this week in Seattle with John Raitt in "Carousel."

ANYONE CAN WHISTLE

It is an unhappy fact of life on Broadway that the theatre's complex economics sometimes force a show to close when too few people have had the opportunity of judging it for themselves.

Columbia's Original Broadway Cast Recording of ANYONE CAN WHISTLE cannot give you everything you would have experienced if you had seen the show at the Majestic Theatre. But at the very least it allows you to hear Stephen Sondheim's lyrics and music for the Arthur Laurents book and to form your own opinion of them.

The prime elements of ANYONE CAN WHISTLE are wit and humanity specially blended with affecting songs, bright lyrics and an ingenious plot. We believe that the Sondheim-Laurents kind of originality and invention needs the hearing and rehearing made possible by recording.

Broadway Legit's Big Boom

Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum."

Evidence of a bullish trend is reflected in the following financial summaries, with the shows listed alphabetically:

'Any Wednesday'

This comedy by Muriel Resnik is regarded as the sleeper of the season. The production, capitalized at $95,000, plus $18,615 overcall, moved into the black last week, its 10th frame at the Music Box Theatre, N.Y. The rapid payoff entry was produced at a cost of $58,952 by George W. George and Frank Granat, in partnership with Howard Erskine, Peter Katz and Edward Specter.

An out-of-town tryout loss of $16,714 and pre-New York opening expense of $6,646 brought the cost of opening the comedy on Broadway to $82,312. The show, costarring Sandy Dennis and Don Porter, is in the sellout groove and clears around $12,000 weekly at capacity.

'Barefoot in the Park'

Another fast payoff show, this comedy, now in its 28th week at the Biltmore Theatre, N.Y., is figured to have earned a net profit thus far of about 140% on its $125,000 investment. The production, a steady sellout since its opening, cost $83,480 to produce and clears about $10,000 weekly at capacity.

"Barefoot," written by Neil Simon and produced by Saint Subber, costars Elizabeth Ashley, Robert Redford, Mildred Natwick and Kurt Kasznar.

'The Deputy'

The amount still to be recovered on this controversial drama, which has been playing to sellout business, is now figured to be around $75,000. The Herman Shumlin-Alfred Crown production, currently in its 10th week at the Atkinson Theatre, N.Y., cost $134,577 to produce. It was capitalized at $160,000, plus 20% overcall which boosted the total investment to $184,000.

Emlyn Williams and Jermey Brett costar in the Jerome Rothenberg adaptation of Richard and Clara Winston's translation of Rolf Hochuth's play. The production can earn over $7,000 at capacity and if it holds at that pace could be in the black in 11 more weeks.

'Dylan'

As of April 4, approximately 65% of the $160,000 invested in this production had been recouped, and additional coin has since been earned. The production cost $151,838 to produce. There was an out-of-town tryout profit of $39,407 and pre-New York opening expenses of $17,257 which brought the cost to $129,688 to open the play at the Plymouth Theatre, N.Y., where it's now in its 16th week.

The production, the first Broadway producing venture for George W. George and Frank Granat, who, as previously indicated, are also represented on Broadway as coproducers of "Any Wednesday," stars Alec Guinness. It was written by Sidney Michaels and is based on material from two books, "Dylan Thomas," by John Brinnin, and "Leftover Life to Kill," by Caitlin Thomas.

'Hello Dolly'

Capitalized at $420,000 (including 20% overcall), this smash musical cost $450,112 to produce. The initial outlay was reduced by an out-of-town tryout profit of $4,655, but there was additional $17,000 in special post-opening advertising costs. The production, this season's hottest ticket thus far, is figured to have a deficit now of around $300,000. On the assumption that they'll be no letup in its sellout pace for some time to come, the production is figured likely to move into the black in about 20 more weeks, at the rate of around $15,000 weekly at capacity.

The musical, produced by David Merrick and starring Carol Channing, is currently in its 16th week at the St. James Theatre, N.Y. It's an adaptation of Thornton Wilder's "The Matchmaker," with book by Michael Stewart and music and lyrics by Jerry Herman.

'110 in the Shade'

Currently in its 28th week at the Broadhurst Theatre, N.Y., this Merrick production is figured to have thus far recovered over 60% of its $300,000 investment. The musical, which cost $283,586 to produce, isn't in the powerhouse groove, but it has been operating at a profit. A deal for a Civic Light Opera Assn. production of the tuner on the Coast this summer should provide the parent company with added coin.

Robert Horton, Inga Swenson and Stephen Douglass costar in the musical version of N. Richard Nash's play, "The Rainmaker," for which Nash wrote the book, Harvey Schmidt the music and Tom Jones the lyrics.

Off-Broadway Reviews

La Vida Es Sueno

John Ben Tarver, Jose Crespo, Jay Broad, Jerome Metz & Laurence Goldstein, by special arrangement with Eric Bentley, under the sponsorship of the Teatro Espanol of New York, presentation of a drama in Spanish, by Pedro Calderon de la Barca. Staged by Jose Crespo; scenery, Vincent Piacentini Jr.; executive producer, John Ben Tarver; costumes, Richard Seger; asst. director, Paco Villar. Opened March 18, '64, at the Astor Place Playhouse, N.Y.; $3.90 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Raul Davila, Maruja Mas, Jose Crespo, Paco Villar, Carlos Rafart, Myrna de Casenave, Raul Julia, Eliser Escalante, Rodolfo De La Madrid, Feliz Estremera, Radames Lopes, Ana Marta Morales, Leonor Vetulli, Eduardo Hernandez, Azarael Cabrera, Ali Colom.

Performed in the original Spanish, "La Vida es Sueno" is a powerful, visually striking production of the Calderon play. It features excellent acting, and it has been skillfully staged by Jose Crespo.

Raul Davis registers strongly as Segismundo, the Prince of Poland, who emerges into the world after having been imprisoned since birth because of a dire prophecy. He conveys all the anger and frustration of the incarcerated hero, superbly enacts his bewilderment and wonder when he is first brought to the court, and grows in stature and nobility as the play progresses. Crespo is regal and sympathetic as the King, and Maruja Mas is a fiery, intense heroine. As her father, Paco Villar offers good support.

Unlike the English version with which the production is alternating on the stage of the Astor Place Playhouse, this one is done in traditional, grand style, with representational sets by Vincent Piacentini Jr. and colorful costumes by Richard Segar.

The almost SRO house at the mid-week performance reviewed last week indicated that students as well as Spaniards living in New York are attending. Beginning last week, an extra performance was added for Saturday afternoons, making a total of six Spanish, five English weekly. A plot synopsis is available to those not speaking Spanish. Kenn.

Billygoat Eddie

Jones Harris presentation of a new comedy by James Grady. Staged by Lawrence Kornfeld; sets and lighting, Joel Cook; costumes, Sally Gifft; production stage manager, Wm. E. Dauphin. Opened April 20, '64, at the Writers Stage Theatre, N.Y.C.; $3.90 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Joyce Aaron, Lucille Benson, Louis Camuti Jr., James Antonio, Mary Boylan, Grace Carney, Sheldon Baron, Hal Burdick, Nancy Nugent, Betty O'Rear, Charles Welsh.

At the beginning of "Billygoat Eddie," one of the actors asks the audience not to be unhappy if the play has lots of talk and little action. After all, he says, two people talking to each other is an event in itself.

Forewarned or not, spectators are bound to be both annoyed and bored by this alleged comedy. It's set in Cambridge, Mass., in the 1840's, and is evidently concerned with social reformers, sincere and hypocritical. The author, James Grady, takes pot shots at complacency, at right-wingers, and at misguided do-gooders, and once in a while his jabs strike home.

But the language is a strange combination of flowery and slang, with too many bad jokes and tiresome puns. The flimsy plot is much ado about very little, and doesn't help to get across the playwright's message.

Charles C. Welsh, Nancy Nugent, James Antonio, Hal Burdick, and Joyce Aaron do as well as possible in roles that are, to put it mildly, unrewarding. Kenn.

Diary of a Madman

Nimara Productions, in association with Alex Hassilev, production of a drama in three acts based on a short story by Gogol; adapted from the French by Roger Coggio and Sylvie Luneau; English version by Eric Rudd. Staged by William Hickey; incidental music, Georges Delerue; sets and lighting, Richard Hay; costumes, Patricia Quinn Stuart; associate lighting director, Robert Brand. Opened April 16, '64, at the Gramercy Arts Theatre, N.Y.C.; $3.50 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Jack Matalon.

Zack Matalon gives a bravura performance in "Diary of a Madman," a one-character dramatization of the Gogol story about a Russian clerk's descent into insanity.

The play is actually a string of monologs, entries in the clerk's daily journal. As such, it becomes somewhat monotonous toward the end. But William Hickey's staging is imaginative and effective, and Matalon's acting is consistently excellent.

As the unhappy clerk who falls in love hopelessly with a general's daughter and winds up totally deranged, believing that he is the King of Spain, the actor has opportunities to be amusing, pathetic, and frightening, and he makes the most of them.

The music, by Georges Delerue, is an asset, as are the settings and lighting by Richard Hay. Patricia Quinn Stuart's costumes are suitable. "Diary of a Madman," which ran for more than a year in Paris, is unlikely to repeat its success here, since it's more a staged reading than a play. But, as acted by Matalon, it makes an interesting evening. Kenn.

Opera and Concert Reviews

The Two Pedagogues

Vienna, March 30.

Opera in two acts by Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. Libretto by Johann Ludwig Casper after a novel by Eugen Scribe, adapted for the Vienna presentation by Johann Wetzner. Produced, designed and directed by Gandolf Buschbeck. Cast: Kurt Strauss, Erich Kren Uta Buge, Ernst Scheureck and Mechthild Gessendorf. Conductor, Hans Gabor, at Fleischmarkt street theatre. $3 top.

Even for Vienna it was a surprise to learn that Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (1809-47) wrote, age 12, a "short" opera (2½ hours). So far it is the only one discovered but historians are still turning over the leaves in old archives in search of the "second" allegedly written when Mendelssohn was older. The Vienna presentation of "The Two Pedagogues" was a professional first after amateurs did it. Vienna Chamber Opera specializing in musical curiosities entrusted Gandolf Buschbeck with practically everything, excepting the music, and this legit expert did a fine job. Together with wellknown singers, as Kurt Strauss, Erich Kren, Uta Buge, Ernst Scheureck and Mechthild Gessendorf. Story concerns a heartless farmer, opposed to the marriage of his son to an "unworthy" girl. Heavies have changed, so has operatic style, but Mendelssohn's score reveals his talent though but a youngster. It contains many melodies, at least worthy to be orchestrated for concert music, the great German hobby anyway. Maas.

Vivian Rivkin

(Carnegie Hall, N.Y.)

Vivian Rivkin is an energetic and devoted pianist, well in command of the music and with the orchestra. Her fault: she does not always catch the spirit of the mighty Wolfgang Mozart. Her piano style seemed overly romantic. A too liberal use of pedalling and a thickly-colored dramatic style was more suited to early Beethoven. The crystal clarity of Mozart was lacking. She opened with the concerto I in F major, a charmingly baroque piece marred by some muddy fingering in its opening bars. This rendition was the least successful of the four concerti played. The cadenza by David Hollander—a snarling, Lisztean interlude—further detracted from the spirit of Salzburg.

When Joseph Eger took off by himself conducting the pickup orchestra in Symphony No. 29 in A major it was apparent that he shared the blame of the evening. He played his Mozart in a romanticized, muffled, sentimental and unfortright manner. Kean.

Italian Song Book

(Kaufmann Hall, N.Y.)

The idea of presenting Hugo Wolf's "Italian Song Book" as a combination of dramatic reading and its usual musical form may have sounded good in conjecture but didn't come off too well in actual performance. Presentation by the Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. of this concert staged by Matthew Farruggio, incorporated the talents of singers Margot Blum and James Schwabacher, poet James Schevill and pianist Alden Gilchrist. The idea was to read Wolf's witty lyrics in English before the vocalists interpreted them in German.

As singers, Miss Blum and Schwabacher are most excellent; as thespians, they're something less. Schevill, despite a resonant, beautifully enunciated delivery, displayed little life in his readings. Gilchrist's accompaniment was most capable. A well-intended but unsuccessful experiment. Robe.

Insurance tycoon Elmer Leterman, who is an unabashed extrovert because he accents that individualistic personality is as an important a stock in trade as an actor's routine or attire—in fact he simulates both—has been commissioned to write another (his third) "success story" book for Harper & Row. Despite the flamboyant title, "There's a Fortune in Showmanship," Leterman's anthology of personal success stories will put accent on business and industrial showmanship, not the theatrical kind.

Native New Yorker Carl Winston, now on the Frisco News-Call-Bulletin, east to write about the Fair, says "I had to travel 3,000 miles to get mugged." It happened at 11:30 p.m. while exiting the subway at Lexington and 60th, en route to his Hotel Regency digs. The two muggers (white) apparently spotted his hip-pocket wallet and extracted it pronto, after first giving him severe punishment. As it developed, he didn't have much cash on him but did lose a flock of credit cards on which he stopped payment pronto.

OBITUARIES

BERNARD L. MULLINS

Bernard L. Mullins, 66, a retired v.p. and director of the Travelers Broadcasting Service Corp., operator of radio station WTIC, WTIC-FM and WTIC-TV, Hartford, died April 23 in that city. A native of Stafford Springs, Conn., he joined WTIC as an announcer in 1935.

Mullins also was an actor and singer on the station in the 1930s and '40s in addition to working as a newscaster. In the latter capacity he handled such major news events as the tragic Hartford circus fire in 1944. He was named director of public relations for the station in 1947.

He became a v.p. in 1957. Two years later he was named v.p. in charge of radio programs, a post he held at the time of his retirement last October.

Surviving are his wife and son.

DOLORES

SEAMUS KAVANAGH

Seamus Kavanagh, 53, head of children's programs for Radio Eireann (Irish radio service), died April 20 in Dublin. A onetime teacher, he turned actor in 1947 during a strike with the role of the priest in Herbert Wilcox's production of "The Courtneys of Curzon St." Later in the same year he joined Radio Eireann as an assistant in its drama department.

A fine character actor, Kavanagh was cast in such major roles as the bricklayer in Sean O'Casey's "The Bishop's Bonfire." He portrayed Captain Boyle in the Columbia recording of "Juno and the Paycock." Recently, he completed recordings for the Irish Pavilion at the New York World's Fair.

Kavanagh, who also was a producer, staged many plays in Irish and was a judge at theatre festivals.

A bachelor, he is survived by three sisters.

ADOLF JAHR

Adolf Jahr, 70, stage and screen actor and onetime operetta singer, died April 19 in Stockholm after a long illness. He started his half-century theatrical career as a vocalist and starred in classical operettas at the Hippodrom Theatre in Malmo, Sweden.

Jahr made his screen debut in 1924 in "Den Gamla Herrgarden" (The Old Manor). In subsequent years he appeared in several films with the late Edvard Persson. During the 1930s Jahr was known as the "Swedish Douglas Fairbanks."

He turned character actor in the '40s. His portrayal of the role of Carlsson in Strindberg's "Hemsoborna" in 1944 won him critical plaudits. Several years ago he appeared at Sweden's Royal Dramatical Theatre in Hjalmar Bergman's "Hans Nads Testamente." It was one of his last performances.

Three brothers survive.

EINAR NILSON

Einar Nilson, 83, composer-conductor who directed the orchestra and choir for Max Reinhardt and Morris Gest's production of "The Miracle," died April 20 in Hollywood. His career was intertwined with that of Reinhardt both in the U.S. and abroad. He also was co-founder of the Salzburg Festival.

As Reinhardt's musical director in Berlin Nilson conducted world preems of compositions by Richard Strauss and Busoni. He wrote the score for "Everyman," 15th Century morality play produced by Reinhardt in the Hollywood Bowl in 1936, and his work entertained thousands in the Hollywood Bowl during the 1930s. In the late years he was associated with Warner Bros. music dept.

Surviving are his wife, former singer Travis Nilson, and two sons.

BERT BENDON

Bert Bendon, longtime vaude comedian and script writer, formerly of the act Power & Bendon, died April 20 in Glasgow. He headlined in vaude many times in Scotland as well as in London and elsewhere.

A native of Glasgow, Bendon began his career with an amateur concert party in that city's old Palace Theatre. Teaming with the late Neil Power, he formed an act that clicked in London's West End. Duo was noted in U.K. vaude for their "Mending the Door" sketch. When the act split up just before World War II, Bendon continued as a single.

In latter years, with diminishing market in vaude, he concentrated on script writing, and worked for fellow-comedians.
